An unauthorized kiss. Shakspeare, Othello.

It is for you to ravage seas and land,
Unauthoriz'd by my supreme command. Dryden.

UNAWA'KED.* } adj. Not roused from sleep; not UNAWA'KENED. } awakened.

Strange! the theme most affecting, most sublime,
Momentous most to man, should sleep unsung:
And yet it sleeps by genius unawak'd
Painim or Christian, to the blush of wit. Young.

The school astonish'd stood, but found it vain
To combat still with demonstration strong,
And, unawaken'd, dream beneath the blaze
Of truth. Thomson on Sir Is. Newton.

UNAWA'RE.* adj. [unpæp, Sax. incautus.] Without thought; inattentive.

I am not unaware how the productions of the Grub-street brotherhood have, of late years, fallen under many prejudices.
Swift, Tale of a Tub, Introduct.

UNAWA'RE.† } adv. [from the Sax. unpæp. See the UNAWA'RES. } adjective.]

Without thought; without previous meditation.

Take heed lest you fall unawares into that inconvenience you formerly found fault with. Spenser.

It is my father's face,
Whom, in this conflict, I unawares have kill'd. Shakspeare.

Firm we subsist, yet possible to swerve,
And fall into deception unaware. Milton, P. L.

A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,
Of wine and honey mix'd; with added store
Of opium: to his keeper this he brought,
Who swallow'd unawares the sleepy draught,
And snor'd secure. Dryden.

'Tis a sensation like that of a limb lopt off; one is trying every minute unawares to use it, and finds it is not. Pope.

2. Unexpectedly; when it is not thought of; suddenly.

My hand, unawares to me, was, by the force of that endeavour it just before employed to sustain the fallen weight, carried up with such violence, that I bruised it. Boyle.

Though we live never so long, we are still surprized: we put the evil day far from us, and then it catches us unawares, and we tremble at the prospect. Wake.

3. In this sense I believe at unawares is the proper use.

Let destruction come upon him at unawares, and let his net that he hath hid, catch himself. Ps. xxxv. 8.

He breaks at unawares upon our walks,
And, like a midnight wolf invades the fold. Dryden.

UNA'WED. adj. Unrestrained by fear or reverence.

The raging and fanatick distemper of the house of commons must be attributed to the want of such good ministers of the crown, as, being unawed by any guilt of their own, could have watched other men's. Clarendon.

Unforc'd by punishment, unaw'd by fear,
His words were simple, and his soul sincere. Dryden.

UNBA'CKED. adj.

1. Not tamed; not taught to bear the rider.

Then I beat my tabor;
At which, like unback'd colts, they prick'd their ears,
Advanc'd their eylids, lifted up their noses,
As they smelt musick. Shakspeare, Tempest.

A well wayed horse will safely convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unback'd filly may give thee a fall. Suckling.

They flinch like unback'd fillies. Dennis, Lett.

2. Not countenanced; not aided.

Let the weight of thine own infamy
Fall on thee unsupported, and unback'd. Daniel, Civ. War.

UNBA'LANCED. adj. Not poised; not in equipoise.

Let earth unbalanc'd from her orbit fly,
Planets and suns run lawless through the sky. Pope.

UNBA'LLAST. } adj. Not kept steady by ballast; UNBA'LLASTED. } unsteady.

They having but newly left those grammatick flats, where they struck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable construction; and now on the sudden transported under another climate, to be tost and turmoiled with their unballasted wits, in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy, do, for the most part, grow into hatred of learning. Milton on Education.

As at sea the unballast vessel rides,
Cast to and fro, the sport of winds and tides:
So in the bounding chariot toss'd on high,
The youth is hurried headlong through the sky. Addison.

UNBA'NDED. adj. [from band.] Wanting a string, or band.

Your hose should be ungartered, your bonnet unbanded, and every thing demonstrating a careless desolation. Shakspeare.

UNBAPTI'ZED.* adj. Not baptized.

If Christ himself, who giveth salvation, do require baptism, it is not for us, that look for salvation, to sound and examine him, whether unbaptized men may be saved, but seriously to do that which is required, and religiously to fear the danger, which may grow by the want thereof. Hooker, Eccl. Pol. B. 5. § 59.

To UNBA'R. v. a. [from bar.] To open, by removing the bars; to unbolt.

'Tis not secure, this place or that to guard,
If any other entrance stand unbarr'd. Denham.

These rights the king refus'd,
Deaf to their cries; nor would the gates unbar
Of sacred peace, or loose th' imprison'd war. Dryden.

UNBA'RBED. adj. [barba, Latin.] Not shaven. Out of use.

Must I go shew them my unbarbed sconce!
Must my base tongue give to my noble heart
A lie? Shakspeare, Coriol.

UNBA'RKED. adj. [from bark.] Decorticated; stripped of the bark.

A branch of a tree, unbarked some space at the bottom, and so set in the ground, hath grown. Bacon.

UNBA'SHFUL. adj. Impudent; shameless.

Nor did I with unbashful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility. Shakspeare.

UNBA'TED.† adj. [from bate.] Not repressed; not blunted.

Where is the horse, that doth untread again
His tedious measures with th' unbated fire
That he did pace them first? Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

You may choose
A sword unbated. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

UNBA'THED. adj. [from bath.] Not wet.

Fierce Pasimond, their passage to prevent,
Thrust full on Cymon's back in his descent;
The blade return'd unbath'd, and to the handle bent. Dryden.

UNBA'TTERED. adj. Not injured by blows.

I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms
Are hir'd to bear their staves: or thou, Macbeth;
Or else my sword, with an unbatter'd edge,
I sheath again undeeded. Shakspeare.

To UNBA'Y. v. a. To set open; to free from the restraint of mounds.

I ought now to loose the reins of my affections, to unbay the current of my passion, and love on without boundary or measure. Norris, Miscell.

UNBEA'RABLE.* adj. Not to be borne.

UNBEA'RING.† adj. [unbepenð, Sax. sterilis.] Bringing no fruit.

He with his pruning hook disjoins
Unbearing branches from their head,

UNBEA'TEN. adj.

1. Not treated with blows.

His mare was truer than his chronicle;
For she had rode five miles unspurr'd, unbeaten,
And then at last turn'd tail towards Neweaton. Bp. Corbet.

2. Not trodden.

We must tread unbeaten paths, and make a way where we do not find one; but it shall be always with a light in our hand. Bacon.

If your bold muse dare tread unbeaten paths. Roscommon.

Virtue, to crown her fav'rites, loves to try
Some new, unbeaten passage to the sky. Swift.

UNBEAU'TEOUS.* } adj. Not beautiful; plain. UNBEAU'TIFUL. }

The sanctifying spirit that beautifies the soul, is an humbling spirit also, to make it unbeauteous in its own eyes. Hammond, Works, iv. 610.

I cannot persuade myself, that God ever designed his church for a rude, naked, and unbeautiful lump; or to lay the foundations of purity in the ruins of decency. South, Serm. iii. 431.

That secret unwillingness— might have been in the king, at that time, to marry the unbeautiful daughter of the person whom he hated. Clarendon, on Papal Usurp. vol. i. ch. 6.

To UNBECO'ME.* v. a. Not to become; to misbecome.

When the order of nature is settled and the blessing pronounced, and established by the divine decree, it does not unbecome God to preserve the powers of nature to produce their natural effects. Sherlock on Provid. ch. 9.

It neither unbecomes God nor men to be moved by reason. Sherlock on Provid. ch. 9.

UNBECO'MING. adj. Indecent; unsuitable; indecorous.

Here's our chief guest.——
——If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all things unbecoming. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

No thought of flight,
None of retreat, no unbecoming deed
That argu'd fear. Milton, P. L.

I should rather believe that the nose was the seat of wrath in beasts than in mankind; and that it was unbecoming of any but Pan, who had very much of the beast in him, to wrinkle up his nose in anger. Dryden.

My grief lets unbecoming speeches fall:
I should have dy'd, and not complain'd at all. Dryden.

This petulancy in conversation prevails among some of that sex, where it appears the most unbecoming and unnatural. Addison, Freeholder.

Men of wit, learning, and virtue, might strike out every offensive or unbecoming passage from plays. Swift.

Such proceed upon debates without unbecoming warmth. Swift.

UNBECO'MINGLY.* adv. In an unsuitable or improper manner.

In being discontented, we behave ourselves very unbecomingly and unworthily. Barrow, vol. iii. S. 6.

UNBECO'MINGNESS. n. s. Indecency; indecorum.

If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind, and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the fault. Locke.

Those rebel sons, who dare t' usurp his seat. Dryden.

UNBEGO'T. } adj. [from begot.]
UNBEGO'TTEN. }

1. Eternal; without generation.

Why should he attribute the same honour to matter, which is subject to corruption, as to the eternal, unbegotten, and immutable God? Stillingfleet.

2. Not yet generated.

God omnipotent, must'ring
Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot. Shakspeare.

In thy power
It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot. Milton, P. L.

3. Not attaining existence.

Where a child finds his own parents his perverters, better were it for him to have been unborn and unbegot, than ask a blessing of those whose conversation breathes nothing but a curse. South.

To UNBEGUI'LE. v. a. To undeceive; to set free from the influence of any deceit.

Then unbeguile thyself, and know with me,
That angels, though on earth employ'd they be,
Are still in heaven. Donne.

Their comeliness unbeguiled the vulgar of the odd opinion the loyalists had formerly infused into them, by their concionatory invectives. Howell, Voc. For.

UNBEGU'N.* adj. Not yet begun.

All things, which God in their times and seasons has brought forth, were eternally and before all times in God, as a work unbegun is in the artificer, which afterward bringeth it unto effect. Hooker, Eccl. Pol. B. 5. § 56.

UNBEHE'LD. adj. Unseen; not discoverable to the sight.

These then, though unbeheld in deep of night,

UNBE'ING.* adj. Not existing.

Where we were when the foundations of the earth were laid, when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy, He must answer who asked it; who understands entities of preordination, and beings yet unbeing. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 25.

UNBELIE'F.† n. s. [unᵹeleafa, Saxon.]

1. Incredulity.

'Tis not vain or fabulous,
What the sage poets, taught by the heavenly muse,
Storied of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimeras, and enchanted isles,
And rifted rocks, whose entrance leads to hell;
For such there be, but unbelief is blind. Milton, Comus.

I'm justly plagu'd by this your unbelief,
And am myself the cause of my own grief. Dryden.

Such an universal acquaintance with things will keep you from an excess of credulity and unbelief; i. e. a readiness to believe or to deny every thing at first hearing. Watts.

2. Infidelity; irreligion.

Where profess'd unbelief is, there can be no visible church of Christ; there may be where sound belief wanteth. Hooker.

To UNBELIE'VE. v. a.

1. To discredit; not to trust.

Heav'n shield your grace from woe,
As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go. Shakspeare.

So great a prince and favourite so suddenly metamorphosed into travellers with no greater train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses. Wotton, D. of Buckingham.

2. Not to think real or true.

Nor less than sight and hearing could convince,
Of such an unforeseen and unbeliev'd offence. Dryden.

UNBELIE'VER. n. s. An infidel; one who believes not the Scripture of God.

The antient fathers being often constrained to shew, what warrant they had so much to rely upon the Scriptures, endeavoured still to maintain the authority of the books of God, by arguments such as unbelievers themselves must needs think reasonable, if they judged thereof as they should. Hooker.

What endless war wou'd jealous nations tear,
If none above did witness what they swear?
Sad fate of unbelievers, and yet just,
Among themselves to find so little trust. Waller.

In the New Testament, religion is usually expressed by faith in God and Christ, and the love of them. Hence it is that true Christians are so frequently called believers; and wicked and ungodly men unbelievers. Tillotson.

He pronounces the children of such parents as were, one of them a Christian, and the other an unbeliever, holy, on account of the faith and holiness of that one. Atterbury.

Men always grow vicious before they become unbelievers; but if you would once convince profligates by topicks drawn from the view of their own quiet, reputation, and health, their infidelity would soon drop off. Swift, Miscell.

UNBELIE'VING. adj. Infidel.

No pause,
No stay of slaughter found his vigorous arm;
But the unbelieving squadrons turn'd to flight,
Smote in the rear. Philips.

This wrought the greatest confusion in the unbelieving Jews, and the greatest conviction in the Gentiles. Addison.

In the days of the apostle, when all who professed themselves disciples of Christ were converts of conscience, this severe censure might be restrained to the unbelieving part of mankind. Rogers.

UNBELO'VED. adj. Not loved.

Whoe'er you are, not unbelov'd by heaven,
Since on our friendly shore your ships are driven. Dryden.

To UNBE'ND. v. a.

1. To free from flexure.

It is lawful to relax and unbend our bow, but not to suffer it to be unready, or unstrung. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

I must be in the battle; but I'll go
With empty quiver, and unbended bow. Dryden.

2. To relax; to remit; to set at ease for a time.

Here have I seen the king, when great affairs
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,
Attended to the chace by all the flow'r of youth. Denham.

From those great cares when ease your soul unbends,
Your pleasures are design'd to noble ends. Dryden.

3. To relax vitiously or effeminately.

You unbend your noble strength, to think
So brain-sickly of things. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

UNBE'NDING.† adj.

1. Not suffering flexure.

Not so, when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main. Pope.

2. Not yielding; resolute.

Truth is the most unbending and uncompliable, the most necessary, firm, immutable, and adamantine thing in the world. Cudworth.

Ye noble few, who here unbending stand
Beneath life's pressures, yet a little while,
And all your woes are past. Thomson.

3. Devoted to relaxation.

Since what was omitted in the acting is now kept in, I hope it may entertain your lordship at an unbending hour. Rowe.

UNBE'NEFICED. adj. Not preferred to a benefice.

More vacant pulpits would more converts make;
All would have latitude enough to take:
The rest unbenefic'd your sects maintain. Dryden.

UNBENE'VOLENT. adj. Not kind.

A religion which not only forbids, but by its natural influence sweetens all bitterness and asperity of temper, and corrects that selfish narrowness of spirit, which inclines men to a fierce, unbenevolent behaviour. Rogers.

UNBENI'GHTED. adj. Never visited by darkness.

Beyond the polar circles; to them day
Had unbenighted shone, while the low sun,
To recompense his distance, in their sight
Had rounded still the horizon. Milton, P. L.

UNBENI'GN. adj. Malignant; malevolent.

To the other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy; and when to join

UNBE'NT. adj.

1. Not strained by the string.

Apollo heard; and, conquering his disdain,
Unbent his bow, and Greece inspir'd again. Dryden.

2. Having the bow unstrung.

Why hast thou gone so far,
To be unbent when thou hast ta'en thy stand,
Th' elected deer before thee? Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

3. Not crushed; not subdued.

But thou, secure of soul, unbent with woes,
The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppose. Dryden.

4. Relaxed; not intent.

Be not always on affairs intent,
But let thy thoughts be easy and unbent:
When our mind's eyes are disengag'd and free,
They clearer, farther, and distinctly see. Denham.

UNBESEE'MING. adj. Unbecoming.

No emotion of passion transported me by the indignity of his carriage, to do or say any thing unbeseeming myself. King Charles.

Far be the spirit of the chace from them;
Uncomely courage, unbeseeming skill. Thomson.

UNBESEE'MINGNESS.* n. s. Unbecomingness; indecency.

There is so deep an unbeseemingness in them, as places them in the next door to sin. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 253.

UNBESO'UGHT. adj. Not intreated.

Lest heat should injure us, his timely care
Hath, unbesought, provided; and his hands
Cloth'd us unworthy; pitying while he judg'd. Milton, P. L.

UNBESPO'KEN.* adj. Not ordered beforehand.

Swift unbespoken pomps thy steps proclaim,
And stammering babes are taught to lisp thy name. Dryden, Abs. and Achitophel.

UNBESTO'WED. adj. Not given; not disposed of.

He had now but one son and one daughter unbestowed. Bacon.

UNBETRA'YED. adj. Not betrayed.

Hold unbewail'd their way. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To UNBEWI'TCH.† v. a. [from witch.] To free from fascination.

Ordinary experience observed would unbewitch men as to these delusions. South, vol. ix. S. 6.

To UNBI'ASS. v. a. To free from any external motive; to disentangle from prejudice.

That our understandings may be free to examine, and reason unbiassed give its judgement; being that whereon a right direction of our conduct to true happiness depends; it is in this we should employ our chief care. Locke.

The standing evidences of the gospel, every time they are considered, gain upon sincere, unbiassed minds. Atterbury.

The truest service a private man may do his country, is by unbiassing his mind, as much as possible, between the rival powers. Swift.

Where's the man who counsel can bestow,
Unbiass'd, or by favour, or by spite;

UNBI'ASSEDLY. adv. Without external influence; without prejudice.

I have sought the true meaning; and have unbiassedly embraced what, upon a fair enquiry, appeared so to me. Locke.

UNBI'D.† } adj. [unabeben, unbeben, Saxon; non UNBI'DDEN. } rogatus.]

1. Uninvited.

Unbidden guests
Are often welcomest when they are gone. Shakspeare.

2. Uncommanded; spontaneous.

Thorns also and thistles it shall bring thee forth
Unbid. Milton, P. L.

Roses unbid, and ev'ry fragrant flower,
Flew from their stalks, to strow thy nuptial bower. Dryden.

Unbidden earth shall wreathing ivy bring,
And fragrant herbs, the promises of spring. Dryden.

UNBI'GOTTED. adj. Free from bigotry.

Erasmus, who was an unbigotted Roman Catholick, was so much transported with this passage of Socrates, that he could scarce forbear looking upon him as a saint, and desiring him to pray for him. Addison.

To UNBI'ND.† v. a. [unbindan, Saxon.] To loose; to untie.

His own woe's author, whoso bound it finds,
As did Pyrocles, and it wilfully unbinds. Spenser.

Ye Latian dames,
If there be here, who dare maintain
My right, nor think the name of mother vain,

Unbind your fillets, loose your flowing hair,
And orgies, and nocturnal rites prepare. Dryden.
On the sixth instant it was thought fit to unbind his head. Tatler.

To UNBI'SHOP. v. a. To deprive of episcopal orders.
I cannot look upon Titus as so far unbishoped yet, but that he still exhibits to us all the essentials of jurisdiction. South.

Unbit by rage canine of dying rich. Young, Night Th. 4.

UNBI'TTED.† adj. [from bit.] Unbridled; unrestrained.
That unbitted thought
Doth fall to stray. Sidney, Astr. and Stella.
We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted lusts; whereof I take this love to be a sect or cyon. Shakspeare, Othello.

UNBLA'MABLE. adj. Not culpable; not to be charged with a fault.
Much more could I say concerning this unblamable inequality of fines and rates. Bacon.
He lov'd his people, him they idoliz'd;
And thence proceeds my mortal hatred to him;
That thus unblamable to all beside,
He err'd to me alone. Dryden, Don Sebast.

UNBLA'MABLENESS.* n. s. State of being unblamable.
Keep thy heart free and faithful to thy God; so mayest thou with innocency and unblameableness see all the motions of life. More, Conj. Cabb. p. 209.
By his prudence and carefulness, by the integrity of his heart and the unblamableness of his life, he may be happily serviceable to the saving of himself and those that hear him. Killingbeck, Serm. p. 23.

UNBLA'MABLY. adv. Without taint of fault.
Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblamably we behaved ourselves. 1 Thess. ii. 10.

UNBLA'MED. adj. Blameless; free from fault.
Shall spend your days in joy unblam'd, and dwell
Long time in peace. Milton, P. L.
Unblam'd, abundance crown'd the royal board,
What time this dame rever'd her prudent lord,
Who now is doom'd to mourn. Pope, Odyss.

UNBLA'STED.* adj. Not blasted; not made to wither.
The unblasted bay, to conquests due,
The Persian peach, and fruitful quince,
And there the forward almond grew. Peacham, Embl. (1612.)

That undeflowered and unblemishable simplicity of the gospel. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

UNBLE'MISHED. adj. Free from turpitude; free from reproach; free from deformity.
O welcome, pure-ey'd faith, white-handed hope;
Thou hovering angel, girt with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity. Milton, Comus.
Under this stone lies virtue, youth,
Unblemish'd probity, and truth. Waller.
Is none worthy to be made a wife
In all this town? Suppose her free from strife,
Rich, fair, and fruitful; of unblemish'd life. Dryden.
They appointed, out of these new converts, men of the best sense, and of the most unblemished lives, to preside over these several assemblies. Addison.

UNBLE'NCHED.† adj. Unconfounded; unblinded.
There, where very desolation dwells,
She may pass on with unblench'd majesty:
Be it not done in pride, or in presumption. Milton, Comus.

UNBLE'NDED. adj. Not mingled.
None can boast a knowledge depurate from defilement, within this atmosphere of flesh; it dwells no where in unblended proportions on this side the empyreum. Glanville.

UNBLE'ST. adj.
1. Accursed; excluded from benediction.
It is a shameful and unblessed thing, to take the scum of people, and wicked, condemned men, to be the people with whom you plant. Bacon.
2. Wretched; unhappy.
In thy power
It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot. Milton, P. L.
What is true passion, if unblest it dies?
And where is Emma's joy, if Henry flies? Prior.

UNBLI'GHTED.* adj. Not blighted; unblasted.
In such a world, so thorny, and where none
Find happiness unblighted. Cowper, Task, B. 4.

UNBLOO'DIED. adj. Not stained with blood.
Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead,
Although the kite soar with unbloodied beak. Shakspeare.

UNBLOO'DY. adj. Not cruel; not shedding blood; not stained with blood.
Under the ledge of Atlas lies a cave,
The venerable seat of holy hermits,
Who there, secure in separated cells,
From the purling streams, and savage fruits,
Have wholesome bev'rage, and unbloody feasts. Dryden.

UNBLO'SSOMING.* adj. Not bearing any blossom. Mason.
You may now give a third pruning to peach-trees, taking away and pinching off unblossoming branches. Evelyn, Kal. Hort.

Did I offend you. Shakspeare, As you like it.

He on the wings of cherubim
Up-lifted, in paternal glory rode
Far into chaos, and the world unborn. Milton, P. L.

To what wretched state reserv'd!
Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n
To be thus wasted from us? Milton, P. L.

A queen, from whom
The souls of kings unborn for bodies wait. Dryden.

UNBO'RROWED. adj. Genuine; native; one's own.

But the luxurious father of the fold,
With native purple, and unborrow'd gold,
Beneath his pompous fleece shall proudly sweat. Dryden.

In substances, especially those which the common and unborrow'd names of any language are applied to, some remarkable, sensible qualities, serve to distinguish one from another. Locke.

To UNBO'SOM. v. a.

1. To reveal in confidence.

I lov'd thee, as too well thou knew'st;
Too well, unbosom'd all my secrets to thee,
Not out of levity, but overpower'd
By thy request, who could deny thee nothing. Milton, S. A.

Do we unbosom all our secrets to him, and hide nothing that passeth in the depth of our hearts from him? Atterbury.

2. To open; to disclose.

Should I thence, hurried on viewless wing,
Take up a weeping on the mountains wild,
The gentle neighbourhood of grove and spring
Would soon unbosom all their echoes mild. Milton, Ode.

UNBO'TTOMED. adj.

1. Without bottom; bottomless.

The dark, unbottom'd, infinite abyss. Milton, P. L.

2. Having no solid foundation; having no reliance.

No hat upon his head, his stockings loose. Shakspeare.

To UNBRE'AST.* v. a. To lay open; to uncover.

Those silken shows so dim thy dazzled sight!
Could'st thou unmask their pomp, unbreast their heart,
How would'st thou laugh at this rich beggerie,
And learn to hate such happy miserie! P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. iv. 24.

UNBRE'ATHED.† adj. Not exercised.

They now have toil'd their unbreath'd memories,
With this same plea against our nuptials. Shakspeare.

I cannot praise a fugitive and cloistered virtue, unexercised and unbreathed, that never sallies out and sees her adversary, but slinks out of the race, where that immortal garland is to be run for, not without dust and heat. Milton, Areopagitica.

UNBRE'ATHING. adj. Unanimated.

They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale. Shakspeare.

UNBRE'D. adj.

1. Not instructed in civility; ill educated.

Unbred minds must be a little sent abroad. Gov. of the Tongue.

Man, without the protection of a superior being, is secure of nothing that he enjoys, and uncertain of every thing that he hopes for. Tillotson.

Condemned on Caucasus to lie,
Still to be dying, not to die;
With certain pain, uncertain of relief,
True emblem of a wretched lover's grief. Granville.

3. Not sure in the consequence.

I must be married to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass:
Murther her brothers, and then marry her!
Uncertain way of gain! Shakspeare, Rich. III.

In the bright air the faulchion shone,
Or whistling slings dismiss'd th' uncertain stone. Gay.

The search of our future being, is but a needless, anxious, and uncertain haste to be knowing, sooner than we can, what, without all this solicitude, we shall know a little later. Pope.

4. Not exact; not sure.

Ascanius young, and eager of his game,
Soon bent his bow, uncertain in his aim:
But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his panting sides. Dryden.

5. Unsettled; unregular.

As the form of our publick service is not voluntary, so neither are the parts thereof uncertain; but they are all set down in such order, and with such choice, as hath, in the wisdom of the church, seemed best. Hooker.

UNCE'RTAINED. adj. Made uncertain. A word not used.

The diversity of seasons are not so uncertained by the sun and moon alone, who always keep one and the same course, but that the stars have also their working therein. Ralegh.

UNCE'RTAINLY. adv.

1. Not surely; not certainly.

Go, mortals, now, and vex yourselves in vain
For wealth, which so uncertainly must come:
When what was brought so far, and with such pain,
Was only kept to lose it nearer home. Dryden.

Names must be of very unsteady meaning, if the ideas be referred to standards without us, that cannot be known at all, or but very imperfectly and uncertainly. Locke.

UNCONCE'RNEDLY. adv. Without interest or affection; without anxiety; without perturbation.

Not the most cruel of our conquering foes,
So unconcern'dly can relate our woes,
As not to lend a tear. Denham.

Death was denounc'd, that frightful sound,
Which ev'n the best can hardly bear:
He took the summons, void of fear,
And unconcern'dly cast his eyes around,
As if to find and dare the griesly challenger. Dryden.

Is heaven, with its pleasures for evermore, to be parted with so unconcernedly? Is an exceeding and eternal weight of glory too light in the balance against the hopeless death of the atheist, and utter extinction. Bentley.

UNCONCE'RNEDNESS. n. s. Freedom from anxiety, or perturbation.

No man, having done a kindness to another, would think himself justly dealt with, in a total neglect, and unconcernedness of the person who had received that kindness. South.

UNCONCE'RNING. adj. Not interesting; not affecting; not belonging to one.

Things impossible in their nature, or unconcerning to us, cannot beget it. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

The science of medals, which is charged with so many unconcerning parts of knowledge, and built on such mean materials, appears ridiculous to those that have not examined it. Addison on Medals.

UNCONCE'RNMENT. n. s. The state of having no share.

Being privileged by an happy unconcernment in those legal murders, you may take a sweeter relish of your own innocence. South.

UNCONCLU'DENT. } adj. Not decisive; inferring no
UNCONCLU'DING. } plain or certain conclusion or consequence.

Our arguments are incvident and unconcludent. Hale.

He makes his understanding only the warehouse of other men's false and unconcluding reasonings, rather than a repository of truth for his own use. Locke.

UNCONCLU'DIBLE.* adj. Not determinable.

By endeavouring more magisterially and determinately to comprehend and conclude that which is unconcludible, and incomprehensible to the understanding of man, we work ourselves into anxiety and subtile distemper. More, Song of the Soul, Notes, p. 352.

UNCONCLU'DINGNESS. n. s. Quality of being unconcluding.

Either may be much more probably maintained than hitherto, as against the unaccurateness and the unconcludingness of the analytical experiments vulgarly relied on. Boyle.

UNCONCLU'SIVE.* adj. Not decisive; not regularly consequential.

Had the promises been of any other sort but these, i. e. conditional promises, the apostle's illation of so much duty cleansing and perfecting, had been utterly unconclusive, if not impertinent. Hammond, Works, iv. 554.

UNCONCO'CTED. adj. Not digested; not matured.

We swallow cherry-stones, but void them unconcocted. Brown, Vulg. Err.

In theology, I put as great a difference between our new lights and antient truths, as between the sun and an unconcocted, evanid meteor. Glanville.

Did she extend the gloomy clouds on high,
Where all the amazing fireworks of the sky,
In unconcocted seeds fermenting lie. Blackmore.

UNCONDE'MNED. adj. Not condemned.

It was a familiar and uncondemned practice amongst the Greeks and Romans, to expose, without pity, their innocent infants. Locke.

UNCONDI'TIONAL. adj. Absolute; not limited by any terms.

O pass not, Lord! an absolute decree,
Or bind thy sentence unconditional;
But in thy sentence our remorse foresee,
And, in that foresight, this thy doom recal. Dryden.

Our Saviour left a power in his church to absolve men from their sins; but this was not an absolute and unconditional power vested in any, but founded upon repentance, and on the penitent's belief in him alone. Ayliffe, Parergon.

UNCONDU'CING.* adj. Not leading to.

I judged it a work in some sort not unconducing to a publick benefit. Phillips, Theat. Poet. Pref.

UNCONDU'CTED.* adj. Not led; not guided.

He that can seriously ascribe all this to an undisciplined and unconducted troop of atoms ambling up and down confusedly through the field of infinite space, what might he not as easily assert, or admit? Barrow, vol. ii. S. 6.

UNCONFI'NABLE. adj. Unbounded.

You rogue! you stand upon your honour! why, thou unconfinable baseness, it is as much as I can do to keep mine honour. Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

UNCONFI'NED. adj.

1. Free from restraint.

I wonder at it.
That shews thou art unconfin'd. Shakspeare.

Chaucer has refined on Boccace, and has mended the stories he has borrowed: though prose allows more liberty of thought, and the expression is more easy when unconfined by numbers. Our countrymen carries weight, and yet wins the race at disadvantage. Dryden.

Poets, a race long unconfin'd and free,
Still fond and proud of savage liberty,
Receiv'd his laws. Pope, Ess. on Criticism.

2. Having no limits; unbounded.

If that which men esteem their happiness, were, like the light, the same sufficient and unconfined good, whether ten thousand enjoy the benefit of it, or but one, we should see men's good will and kind endeavours would be as universal. Spectator.

Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfin'd;
A knowledge both of books and human kind. Pope.

UNCONFI'NEDLY.* adv. Without limitation; without confinement.

In this way any man is able to benefit all, or unconfinedly to oblige mankind. Barrow, Serm. on the Rest. of K. Ch. II.

UNCONFI'RMED. adj.

1. Not fortified by resolution; not strengthened; raw; weak.

The unexpected speech
The king had made upon the new-rais'd force,
In th' unconfirm'd troops, much fear did breed. Daniel.

Not unconform to other shining globes. Milton, P. L.

UNCONFO'RMABLE. adj. Inconsistent; not conforming.

Unto those general rules, they know we do not defend, that we may hold any thing unconformable. Hooker.

Moral good, is an action conformable to the rule of our duty. Moral evil, is an action unconformable to it, or a neglect to fulfil it. Watts, Logick.

UNCONFO'RMITY. n. s. Incongruity; inconsistency.

The moral goodness or evil of men's actions, which consist in their conformity or unconformity to right reason, must be eternal, necessary, and unchangeable. South.

UNCONFU'SED. adj. Distinct; free from confusion.

It is more distinct and unconfused than the sensitive memory. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

If in having our ideas in the memory ready at hand, consists quickness of parts; in this of having them unconfused, and being able nicely to distinguish one thing from another, consists the exactness of judgement. Locke.

UNCONFU'SEDLY. adv. Without confusion.

Every one finds that he knows, when any idea is in his understanding, and that, when more than one are there, he knows them, distinctly and unconfusedly, from one another. Locke.

UNCONFU'TABLE. adj. Irrefragable; not to be convicted of errour.

One political argument they boasted of as unconfutable, that from the marriages of ecclesiasticks, would ensue poverty in many of the children, and thence a disgrace and burden to the church. Sprat, Serm.

UNCONGE'ALED. adj. Not concreted by cold.

By exposing wine, after four months' digestion in horsedung, unto the extremity of cold, the aqueous parts will freeze, but the spirit retire, and be found uncongealed in the center. Brown, Vulg. Err.

UNCO'NJUGAL. adj. Not consistent with matrimonial faith; not befitting a wife or husband.

My name
To all posterity may stand defam'd;
With malediction mention'd, and the blot
Of falsehood most unconjugal traduc'd. Milton, S. A.

UNCONNE'CTED. adj. Not coherent; not joined by proper transitions or dependence of parts; lax; loose; vague.

Those who contemplate only the fragments broken off from any science, dispersed in short, unconnected discourses, can never survey an entire body of truth. Watts.

UNCONNI'VING. adj. Not forbearing penal notice.

To that hideous place not so confin'd,
By rigour unconniving; but that oft
Leaving my dolorous prison, I enjoy
Large liberty, to round this globe of earth. Milton, P. R.

UNCO'NQUERABLE. adj. Not to be subdued; insuperable; not to be overcome; invincible.

Louis was darting his thunder on the Alps, and causing his enemies to feel the force of his unconquerable arms. Dryden.

Spadillio, first unconquerable lord!
Led off two captive trumps, and swept the board. Pope.

UNCO'NQUERABLY. adv. Invincibly; insuperably.

The herds of Iphyclus, detain'd in wrong;
Wild, furious herds, unconquerably strong. Pope.

UNCO'NQUERED. adj.

1. Not subdued; not overcome.

To die so tamely,
O'ercome by passion and misfortune,
And still unconquer'd by my foes, sounds ill. Denham.
Unconquer'd yet, in that forlorn estate,
His manly courage overcame his fate. Dryden.

2. Insuperable; invincible.

These brothers had a-while served the king of Pontus; and in all his affairs, especially of war, whereunto they were only apt, they had shewed as unconquered courage, so a rude faithfulness. Sidney.

What was that snaky-headed gorgon shield,
That wise Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin!
Wherewith she freez'd her foes to congeal'd stone,
But rigid looks, and chaste austerity,
And noble grace, that dash'd brute violence,
With sudden adoration and blank awe? Milton, Comus.

UNCO'NSCIONABLE. adj.

1. Exceeding the limits of any just claim or expectation.

A man may oppose an unconscionable request for an unjustifiable reason. L'Estrange.

2. Forming unreasonable expectations.

You cannot be so unconscionable as to charge me for not subscribing of my name, for that would reflect too grossly upon your own party, who never dare it. Dryden.

3. Enormous; vast. A low word.

His giantship is gone somewhat crest-fall'n,
Stalking with less unconscionable strides,
And lower looks, but in a sultry chafe. Milton, S. A.

4. Not guided or influenced by conscience.

How infamous is the false, fraudulent, and unconscionable? Hardly ever did any man of no conscience continue a man of any credit long. South.

UNCO'NSCIONABLENESS. n. s. Unreasonableness of hope or claim.

UNCO'NSCIONABLY. adv. Unreasonably.

Indeed 'tis pity you should miss
Th' arrears of all your services;
And for th' eternal obligation,
Y' have laid upon th' ungrateful nation,
Be used so unconscionably hard,
As not to find a just reward. Hudibras.
This is a common vice; though all things here
Are sold, and sold unconscionably dear. Dryden, Juv.

UNCO'NSCIOUS. adj.

1. Having no mental perception.

Unconscious causes only still impart
Their utmost skill, their utmost power exert:
Those which can freely chuse, discern, and know,
Can more or less of art and care bestow. Blackmore.

2. Unacquainted; unknowing.

A yearling bullock to thy name shall smoke,
Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke. Pope.

To UNCO'NSECRATE.† v. a. To render not sacred; to desecrate. Dr. Johnson has mistakenly applied the first of the examples from South as an illustration of unconsecrated in the shape of an adjective. Of the word as a verb he has taken no notice.

The sin of Israel had even unconsecrated and profaned that sacred edifice, and robbed it of its only defence. South.

I could give such an instance from something wrote by a certain prelate of theirs, cardinal and bishop of Beneventum, as were enough not only to astonish all pious ears, but almost to unconsecrate the very church I speak in. South, Serm. ii. 395.

Heaven must be unconsecrated by such violence. Hammond, Works, iv. 505.

UNCONSE'NTING.* adj. Not yielding.

Nor unconsenting hear his friend's request. Pope, Odyss. 15.

UNCONSE'NTED. adj. Not yielded.

We should extend it even to the weaknesses of our natures, to our proneness to evil: for however these, unconsented to, will not be imputed to us, yet are they matter of sorrow. Wake, Prep. for Death.

UNCONSI'DERED. adj. Not considered; not attended to.

Love yourself; and in that love,
Not unconsidered leave your honour. Shakspeare.

It will not be unconsidered, that we find no open track in his labyrinth. Brown, Vulg. Err.

UNCO'NSONANT. adj. Incongruous; unfit; inconsistent.

It seemeth a thing unconsonant, that the world should honour any other as the Saviour, but him whom it honoureth as the creator of the world. Hooker.

UNCONSPI'RINGNESS.* n. s. Absence of plot or conspiracy.

A harmony, whose dissonances serve but to manifest the sincerity and unconspiringness of the writers. Boyle, Style of H. Script. p. 76.

UNCO'NSTANT. adj. [inconstant, Fr. inconstans, Lat.] Fickle; not steady; changeable; mutable.

More unconstant than the wind; who woos
Ev'n now the frozen bosom of the north;
And, being anger'd, puffs away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew-dropping south. Shakspeare.
The unconstant skies
Do change their course as several winds arise. May, Virg.

UNCONSTRA'INED. adj. Free from compulsion.

Will you, with free and unconstrained soul,
Give me your daughter? Shakspeare.

These be the miseries which our first parents brought upon all mankind, unto whom God, in his creation, gave a free and unconstrained will. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

His highness is return'd. ——
And unconstrain'd? But with what change
Of countenance did he receive the message? Denham.
Made for his use, yet he has form'd us so,
We unconstrain'd, what he commands us, do. Dryden.

UNCONSTRA'INEDLY. adv. Without force suffered.

Such a patron has frankly, generously, and unconstrainedly relieved me. South.

UNCONSTRA'INT. n. s. Freedom from constraint; ease.

Mr. Dryden writ more like a scholar; and though the greatest master of poetry, he wanted that easiness, that air of freedom and unconstraint, which is more sensibly to be perceived, than described. Felton on the Classicks.

UNCONSU'LTING. adj. [inconsultus, Lat.] Heady; rash; improvident; imprudent.

It was the fair Zelmane, Plexirtus's daughter, whom unconsulting affection, unfortunately born to me wards, had made borrow so much of her natural modesty, as to leave her more decent rayments. Sidney.

UNCONSU'MED. adj. Not wasted; not destroyed by any wasting power.

Hope never comes,
That comes to all, but torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge fed
With ever-burning sulphur unconsum'd. Milton, P. L.

Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsumed, is an idea that always accompanies our complex ideas, signified by the word gold. Locke.

UNCONSU'MMATE. adj. Not consummated.

Acron came to the fight,
Who left his spouse betroth'd, and unconsummate night. Dryden.

UNCONTE'MNED.† adj. Not despised.

Which of the peers
Have uncontemn'd gone by him, or at least
Stood not neglected? Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

She is so true a friend, her husband may to her communicate even his ambitions; and if success crown not expectation, remain nevertheless uncontemned. Habington, Castara, p. 72.

UNCONTE'NDED.* adj. Not contended for; not contested.

Permit me, chief, permit without delay
To lead this uncontended prize away. Dryden, Æn. 5.

UNCONTE'NTED.† adj. Not contented; not satisfied. Dr. Johnson. — This word probably has been in use: but Dr. Johnson has mistakenly given, as an example of it, uncontended in the passage which I have cited under that word.

UNCONTE'NTINGNESS. n. s. Want of power to satisfy.

The decreed uncontentingness of all other goods, is richly repaired by its being but an aptness to prove a rise to our love's settling in God. Boyle.

UNCONTE'STABLE. adj. Indisputable; not controvertible.

Where is the man that has uncontestible evidence of the truth of all that he holds, or of the falsehood of all he condemns? Locke.

UNCONTE'STED. adj. Not disputed; evident.

'Tis by experience uncontested found,
Bodies orbicular, when whirling round,
Still shake off all things on their surface plac'd. Blackmore.

UNCONTRADI'CTED.* adj. Not contradicted.

The place of Daniel was always accounted the most evident and uncontradicted testimony. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 11.

UNCO'NTRITE. adj. Not religiously penitent.

The priest, by absolving an uncontrite sinner, cannot make him contrite. Hammond, Pract. Catechism.

UNCO'NTROVERTED. adj. Not disputed; not liable to debate.

One reason of the uncontroverted certainty of mathematical science is, because 'tis built upon clear and settled significations of names. Glanville.

UNCONTRO'ULABLE.† adj. [Dr. Johnson writes the parent verb control without the u.]

1. Resistless; powerful beyond opposition.

Gaza mourns,
And all that band them to resist

2. Indisputable; irrefragable.

The pension was granted, by reason of the king of England's uncontroulable title to England. Hayward.

This makes appear the error of those, who think it an uncontroulable maxim, that power is always safer lodged in many hands, than in one; those many are as capable of enslaving as a single person. Swift.

UNCONTRO'ULABLY. adv.

1. Without possibility of opposition.
2. Without danger of refutation.

Uncontroulably, and under general consent, many opinions are passant, which, upon due examination, admit of doubt. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Since this light was to rest within them, and the judgement of it wholly to remain in themselves, they might safely and uncontroulably pretend it greater or less. South.

UNCONTRO'ULED. adj.

1. Unresisted; unopposed; not to be overruled.

Should I try the uncontrolled worth
Of this pure cause, 'twould kindle my rapt spirits
To such a flame of sacred vehemence,
That dumb things would be mov'd to sympathize. Milton, Comus.

O'er barren mountains, o'er the flow'ry plain,
Extends thy uncontroul'd and boundless reign. Dryden.

The British navy, uncontroul'd,
Shall wave her double cross t' extremest clime
Terrifick, and return with odorous spoils. Philips.

2. Not convinced; not refuted.

That Julius Cæsar was so born, is an uncontrouled report. Hayward.

UNCONTRO'ULEDLY. adv. Without controul; without opposition.

Mankind avert killing, and being killed; but when the phantasm honour has once possessed the mind, no reluctance of humanity is able to make head against it; but it commands uncontrouledly. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

UNCONVE'RSABLE.† adj. Not suitable to conversation; not social.

In what a miserable state shall we be, when every member of our society shall be of the same unconversable temper with ourselves, and we shall find none that will comply with, or endeavour to soothe and mollify, our obstinacy! Scott, Christ. Life, P. i. ch. 3.

Faith and devotion are traduced and ridiculed, as morose, unconversable qualities. Rogers.

UNCO'NVERSANT.* adj. Not familiar; not acquainted with: followed both by in and with.

It may require many instances and much discoursing to make this out to persons who are haply unconversant in disquisitions of this kind. Madox's Exchequer, Pref.

UNCONVE'RTED. adj.

1. Not persuaded of the truth of Christianity.

Salvation belongeth unto none, but such as call upon the name of our Lord Jesus Christ: which nations, as yet unconverted, neither do, nor possibly can do, till they believe. Hooker.

The unconverted heathens, who were pressed by the many authorities that confirmed our Saviour's miracles, accounted for them after the same manner. Addison on the Chr. Relig.

The apostle reminds the Ephesians of the guilt and misery of their former unconverted estate, when aliens from the commonwealth of Israel. Rogers.

2. Not religious; not yet induced to live a holy life. Thus Baxter wrote a Call to the Unconverted.

UNCONVI'NCED. adj. Not convinced.

A way not to be introduced into the seminaries of those, who are to propagate religion, or philosophy, amongst the ignorant and unconvinced. Locke.

To UNCO'RD. v. a. To loose a thing bound with cords.

UNCORRE'CTED. adj. Inaccurate; not polished to exactness.

I have written this too hastily and too loosely: it comes out from the first draught, and uncorrected. Dryden.

UNCO'RRIGIBLE.* adj. Incapable of being corrected; depraved beyond correction: we now say incorrigible.

He will seeke to amend himselfe, if he be not altogether uncorrigible. Outred, Tr. of Cope on Proverbs, (1580,) fol. 520. b.

UNCORRU'PT. adj. Honest; upright; not tainted with wickedness; not influenced by iniquitous interest.

The pleasures of sin, and this world's vanities, are censured with uncorrupt judgement. Hooker.

Men allege they ne'er can find
Those beauties in a female mind,
Which raise a flame that will endure,
For ever uncorrupt and pure. Swift.

UNCORRU'PTED. adj. Not vitiated; not depraved.

Such a hero never springs,
But from the uncorrupted blood of kings. Roscommon.

Man, yet new,
No rule but uncorrupted reason knew,
And with a native bent did good pursue. Dryden.

Nothing is more valuable than the records of antiquity: I wish we had more of them, and more uncorrupted. Locke.

UNCORRU'PTEDNESS.* n. s. State of being uncorrupted.

How shall the licensers themselves be confided in, unless we can confer upon them, or they assume to themselves above all others in the land, the grace of infallibility and uncorruptedness? Milton, Areopagitica.

UNCORRU'PTIBLE.* adj. That cannot be corrupted.

The glory of the uncorruptible God. Rom. i. 23.

UNCO'URTLINESS. n. s. Unsuitableness of manners to a court; inelegance.

The quakers presented an address, which, notwithstanding the uncourtliness of their phrases, the sense was very honest. Addison.

UNCO'URTLY.† adj. Inelegant of manners; uncivil; coarse; rustick.

Thou hadst
So strange a fellow in thy companie,
His garbe was so uncourtly, I grew sicke. Habington, Q. of Arragon.

The lord treasurer not entering into those refinements of paying the publick money upon private considerations, hath been so uncourtly as to stop it. Swift.

UNCO'UTH.† adj. [uncuð, Saxon, unknown. We now place the accent on the last syllable: it was formerly always on the first.] Odd; strange; unusual.

A very uncouth sight was to behold,
How he did fashion his untoward pace;
For as he forward mov'd his footing old,
So backward still was turn'd his wrinkled face. Spenser.

The lovers standing in this doleful wise,
A warrior bold unwares approached near,
Uncouth in arms yclad, and strange disguise. Fairfax.

I am surprized with an uncouth fear;
A chilling sweat o'erruns my trembling joints;
My heart suspects more than mine eye can see. Shakspeare.

The trouble of thy thoughts this night
Affects me equally; nor can I like
This uncouth dream, of evil sprung, I fear. Milton, P. L.

Say on;
For I that day was absent, as befel,
Bound on a voyage uncouth, and obscure,
Far on excursion towards the gates of hell. Milton, P. L.

It was so uncouth a sight, for a fox to appear without a tail, that the very thought made him weary of his life. L'Estrange.

The secret ceremonies I conceal,
Uncouth, perhaps unlawful to reveal. Dryden.

I am more in danger to misunderstand his true meaning, than if I had come to him with a mind unpossessed by doctors of my sect, whose reasonings will of course make all chime that way, and make the genuine meaning of the author seem harsh, strained, and uncouth to me. Locke.

He made that a pleasant study, which, in the hands of Bartolus and Baldus, was uncouth and rugged. Baker.

UNCO'UTHLY.† adv. [uncuðlice, Saxon.] Oddly; strangely.

Venetians do not more uncouthly ride,
Than did their lubber state mankind bestride. Dryden.

UNCO'UTHNESS. n. s. Oddness; strangeness.

To deny himself in the lesser instances, that so when the greater come, they may not have the disadvantage of uncouthness, and perfect strangeness, to enhance their difficulty, must be acknowledged reasonable. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

UNEXHAU'STED. adj. [inexhaustus, Lat.] Not spent; not drained to the bottom.

What avail her unexhausted stores?
While proud oppression in her vallies reigns. Addison.

UNEXI'STENT.* adj. Not in existence.

A retrograde cognition of times past, and things which have already been, is more satisfactory than a suspended knowledge of what is yet unexistent. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 13.

UNEXPA'NDED. adj. Not spread out.

Every fœtus bears a secret hoard;
With sleeping, unexpanded issue stor'd. Blackmore.

UNEXPECTA'TION.* n. s. Want of previous consideration; want of foresight.

As every other evil, so this especially, is aggravated by our unexpectation. Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

UNEXPE'CTED. adj. Not thought on; sudden; not provided against.

Have wisdom to provide always beforehand, that those evils overtake us not, which death unexpected doth use to bring upon careless men; and although it be sudden in itself, nevertheless, in regard of our prepared minds, it may not be sudden. Hooker.

Sith evils, great and unexpected, do cause oftentimes even them to think upon divine power with fearfullest suspicions, which have been otherwise the most sacred adorers thereof; how should we look for any constant resolution of mind in such cases, saving only where unfeigned affection to God hath bred the most assured confidence to be assisted by his hand? Hooker.

O unexpected stroke! worse than death!
Must I thus leave thee, paradise? Milton, P. L.

Them unexpected joy surpriz'd,
When the great ensign of Messiah blaz'd. Milton, P. L.

Some amazement;
But such as sprung from wonder, not from fear,
It was so unexpected. Denham, Sophy.

To the pale foes they suddenly draw near,
And summon them to unexpected fight. Dryden.

Deep was the wound; he stagger'd with the blow,
And turn'd him to his unexpected foe. Dryden.

When Barcelona was taken by a most unexpected accident of a bomb lighting on the magazine, then the Catalonians revolted. Swift.

UNEXPE'NSIVE.* adj. Not costly; not with great expence.

My life hath not been unexpensive in learning, and voyaging about. Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

UNEXPE'RIENCED. adj. Not versed; not acquainted by trial or practice.

The wisest, unexperienc'd, will be ever
Timorous and loth, with novice modesty,
Irresolute, unhardy, unadventurous. Milton, P. R.

Long use may strengthen men against many such inconveniences, which, to unexperienced persons, may prove very hazardous. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

The powers of Troy;
Not a raw and unexperienc'd train,
But firm body of embattl'd men. Dryden.

These reproaches are the extravagant speeches of those unexperienced in the things they speak against. Tillotson.

Unexperienced young men, if unwarned, take one thing for another. Locke.

The smallest accident intervening, often produces such changes, that a wise man is just as much in doubt of events, as the most ignorant and unexperienced. Swift.

UNEXPE'RT. adj. [inexpertus, Lat.] Wanting skill or knowledge.

Receive the partner of my inmost soul:
Him you will find in letters, and in laws
Not unexpert. Prior.

UNEXPLO'RED. adj.

1. Not searched out.

Oh! say what stranger cause, yet unexplor'd,
Could make a gentle belle reject a lord? Pope.

2. Not tried; not known.

Under thy friendly conduct will I fly,
To regions unexplor'd. Dryden.

UNEXPO'SED. adj. Not laid open to censure.

They will endeavour to diminish the honour of the best treatise, rather than suffer the little mistakes of the author to pass unexposed. Watts on the Mind.

UNEXPRE'SSIBLE. adj. Ineffable; not to be uttered.

What unexpressible comfort does overflow the pious soul, from a conscience of its own innocency! Tillotson.

UNEXPRE'SSIVE. adj.

1. Not having the power of uttering or expressing. This is the natural and analogical signification.

2. Inexpressible; unutterable; ineffable; not to be expressed. Improper, and out of use.

Run, run, Orlando, carve on every tree
The fair, the chaste, and unexpressive she. Shakspeare.

With nectar pure his oozy locks he laves,
And hears the unexpressive nuptial song,
In the blest kingdoms, meek, of joy and love. Milton, Lycidas.

The helmed cherubim,
And sworded seraphim,
Are seen in glitt'ring ranks, with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With unexpressive notes to heaven's new-born heir. Milton, Ode.

UNEXTE'NDED. adj. Occupying no assignable space; having no dimensions.

How inconceivable is it, that a spiritual, i. e. an unextended substance, should represent to the mind an extended one, as a triangle? Locke.

UNEXTI'NGUISHABLE. adj. [inextinguible, Fr.] Unquenchable; not to be put out.

Pain of unextinguishable fire
Must exercise us, without hope of end. Milton, P. L.

What native, unextinguishable beauty must be impressed through the whole, which the defœdation of so many parts by a bad printer, and a worse editor, could not hinder from shining forth? Bentley.

UNEXTI'NGUISHED. adj. [inextinctus, Lat.]

1. Not quenched; not put out.

The souls, whom that unhappy flame invades,
Make endless moans, and, pining with desire,
Lament too late their unextinguish'd fire. Dryden.

Ev'n o'er your cold, your ever-sacred urn,
His constant flame, shall unextinguish'd burn. Lyttleton.

2. Not extinguishable.

An ardent thirst of honour; a soul unsatisfied with all it has done, and an unextinguish'd desire of doing more. Dryden.

UNFA'SHIONABLE. adj. Not modish; not according to the reigning custom.

A man writes good sense, but he has not a happy manner of expression. Perhaps he uses obsolete and unfashionable language. Watts, Logick.

UNFA'SHIONABLENESS. n. s. Deviation from the mode.

Natural unfashionableness is much better than apish, affected postures. Locke.

UNFA'SHIONABLY. adv. [from unfashionable.]

1. Not according to the fashion.

2. Unartfully.

Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up;
And that so lamely and unfashionably,
That dogs bark at me. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

UNFA'SHIONED. adj.

1. Not modified by art.

Mark but how terribly his eyes appear;
And yet there is something roughly noble there;
Which, in unfashion'd nature, looks divine,
And, like a gem, does in the quarry shine. Dryden.

2. Having no regular form.

A lifeless lump, unfashion'd and unfram'd,
Of jarring seeds, and justly chaos nam'd. Dryden.

UNGUI'DED. adj. Not directed; not regulated.

The blood weeps from my heart, when I do shape,
In forms imaginary, th' unguided days,
And rotten times that you shall look upon,
When I am sleeping with my ancestors. Shakspeare.

Can unguided matter keep itself to such exact conformities, as not in the least spot to vary from the species? Glanville.

They resolve all into the accidental, unguided motions of blind matter. Locke.

Nature, void of choice,
Does by unguided motion things produce,
Regardless of their order. Blackmore on the Creation.

UNGUI'LTY.* adj. [unȝylꞇıȝ, Saxon.] Innocent; not guilty; not stained with guilt.

Ne her unguilty age
Did weene unwares, that her unlucky lot
Lay hidden in the bottom of the pot. Spenser, F. Q.

Soft pity in thy breast revive to-day,
By this unguilty blood, goddess divine!
Fanshaw, Past. Fid. p. 167.

Like Phalaris's bull, questioning none but unguilty, making all guilty whom it questions, and saying, Let us oppress the poor righteous man. Archdeacon Arnway, Tab. of Mod. p. 73.

Unguilty cities rise,
Cities of brothers form'd. Thomson, Liberty, P. 4.

UNHA'BITABLE. adj. [inhabitable, Fr. inhabitabilis, Lat.] Not capable to support inhabitants; uninhabitable.

The night and day was always a natural day of twenty-four hours, in all places remote from the unhabitable poles of the world, and winter and summer always measured a year.
Holder.

Though the course of the sun be curbed between the tropicks, yet are not those parts directly subject to his perpendicular beams, unhabitable, or extremely hot. Ray.

UNHA'CKED. adj. Not cut; not hewn; not notched with cuts.

With a blessed, and unvex'd retire,
With unhack'd swords, and helmets all unbruis'd,
We will bear home that lusty blood again. Shakspeare.

Part with unhack'd edges, and bear back
Our targe undinted. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To UNHA'LLOW. v. a. To deprive of holiness; to profane; to desecrate.

Perhaps the fact
Is not so heinous now, foretasted fruit;
Profan'd first by the serpent; by him first
Made common, and unhallow'd, ere our taste. Milton, P. L.

The vanity unhallows the virtue. L'Estrange.

This one use left such an indelible sacredness upon them, that the impiety of the design could be no sufficient reason to unhallow and degrade them to common use. South.

UNHA'LLOWED.† adj. [unhalȝob, Saxon.] Unholy; profane.

Thy currish spirit
Govern'd a wolf, who hang'd for human slaughter,
Ev'n from the gallows did his fell soul fleet;
And while thou lay'st in thy unhallow'd dam
Infus'd itself in thee. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

I had not thought to have unlock'd my lips
In this unhallow'd air, but that this jugler
Would think to charm my judgement, as mine eyes,
Obtruding false rules, pranck'd in reason's garb.
Milton, Comus.

Nor shall presume to violate these bands,
Or touch thy person with unhallow'd hands. Dryden.
Here cease thy flight, nor with unhallow'd lays Touch the fair fame of Albion's golden days. Pope.

She that so far the rest outshin'd;
Sylvia the fair, while she was kind,
Seems only not unhandsome now. Waller.

As I cannot admit that there is any thing unhandsome or irregular; so much less can I grant that there is any thing incommodious in the globe. Woodward.

2. Illiberal; disingenuous.

It is proper and proportionate to our state, and to our necessity, to beg of God pardon for the imperfection of our repentance, acceptance of our weaker sorrows, supplies out of the treasures of his grace and mercy; and thus repenting of the evil and unhandsome adherencies of our repentance, in the whole integrity of the duty, it will become a repentance not to be repented of. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, ch. 4. § 6.

UNHA'NDSOMELY. adv.

1. Inelegantly; ungracefully.

The ruined churches are so unhandsomely patched and thatched, that men do even shun the places for the uncomeliness thereof. Spenser.

UNHA'RBOURED. adj. Affording no shelter.

'Tis chastity:
She that has that is clad in complete steel;
And, like a quiver'd nymph, with arrows keen,
May trace huge forests, and unharbour'd heaths,
Infamous hills, and sandy perilous wilds. Milton, Comus.

UNHA'RDENED.† adj. Not hardened; not made impudent; not made obdurate.

Messengers
Of strong prevailment in unharden'd youth. Shakspeare.
Unripe we were, unblown, unharden'd,
Unfitted for such fatal ends. Beaum. and Fl. Hum. Lieut.

UNHA'RDY. adj. Feeble; tender; timorous.

The wisest, unexperienc'd, will be ever
Timorous, and loth, with novice modesty;
Irresolute, unhardy, unadventurous. Milton, P. R.

UNHA'RMED. adj. Unhurt; not injured.

In strong proof of chastity well armed,
From love's weak, childish bow she lives unharm'd. Shakspeare.

Though great light be insufferable to our eyes; yet the highest degree of darkness does not disease them, for causing no disorderly motion, it leaves that curious organ unharmed. Locke.

The Syrens once deluded, vainly charm'd;
Ty'd to the mast, Ulysses sail'd unharm'd. Granville.

UNHA'RMFUL. adj. Innoxious; innocent.

Themselves unharmful, let them live unharm'd;
Their jaws disabled, and their claws disarm'd. Dryden.

UNHARMO'NIOUS. adj.

3. To disorder; to confuse.

Rather than not accomplish my revenge,
Just or unjust, I would the world unhinge. Waller.
If God's providence did not order it, cheats would not only justle private men out of their rights, but unhinge states, and run all into confusion. Ray on the Creation.

To UNHO'ARD.* v. a. To steal from the hoard.

Or as a thief, bent to unhord the cash
Of some rich burgher, whose substantial doors,
Cross-barr'd and bolted fast, fear no assault,

UNHO'LINESS. n. s. Impiety; profaneness; wickedness.

Too foul and manifest was the unholiness of obtruding upon men remission of sins for money. Ralegh.

UNHO'LY.† adj. [unhaliᵹ, Saxon.]

1. Profane; not hallowed.

Doth it follow that all things now in the church are unholy, which the Lord hath not himself precisely instituted? Hooker.

From the paradise of God,
Without remorse, drive out the sinful pair,

2. Impious; wicked.

We think not ourselves the holier, because we use it; so neither should they with whom no such thing is in use, think us therefore unholy, because we submit ourselves unto that, which, in a matter so indifferent, the wisdom of authority and law have thought comely. Hooker.

Far other dreams my erring soul employ;
Far other raptures of unholy joy. Pope.

UNHO'NEST.* adj. [inhoneste, Fr. inhonestus, Lat.] Dishonourable; dishonest. Obsolete.

Thinking her unhous'd here, and fled from us,
Seek her at Rome. Donne.

Death unawares with his cold, kind embrace,
Unhous'd thy virgin soul from her fair biding place. Milton, Ode.

UNHOU'SED. adj.

1. Homeless; wanting a house.

Call the creatures,
Whose naked natures live in all the spight
Of wreakful heaven; whose bare, unhoused trunks,
To the conflicting elements expos'd,
Answer meer nature. Shakspeare, Timon.

2. Having no settled habitation.

But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhoused, free condition
Put into circumscription and confine. Shakspeare, Othello.

Hear this,
You unhous'd, lawless, rambling libertines. Southern.

UNHOU'SELLED. adj. Having not the sacrament. See To HOUSEL.

Thus was I sleeping, by a brother's hand,
Of life, of crown, of queen at once dispatch'd;
Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhousel'd, disappointed, unanel'd. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

UNHU'MAN.* adj. Barbarous; inhuman. Not now in use.

Unhuman and remorseless cruelty, shown in the spoil and waste they had made upon all nations round about them for the propagation of their empire, which they were still enlarging as their desires, and their desires as hell. South, Serm. xi. 39.

UNHU'MBLED. adj. Not humbled; not touched with shame or confusion.

Should I of these the liberty regard,
Who, freed as to their ancient patrimony,
Unhumbled, unrepented, unreformed,
Headlong would follow. Milton, P. R.

UNHU'RT. adj. Free from harm.

Of fifteen hundred, eight hundred were slain in the field; and of the remaining seven hundred, two men only came off unhurt. Bacon, War with Spain.

I tread more lightly on the ground;
My nimble feet from unhurt flow'rs rebound;
I walk in air. Dryden. St. of Innocence.

Supported by thy care,
Through burning climes I pass'd unhurt,
And breath'd in tainted air. Addison, Spect.

The stars shall fade away;
But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt, amidst the war of elements,
The wrecks of matter, and the crush of worlds. Addison.

UNHU'RTFUL. adj. Innoxious; harmless; doing no harm.

You hope the duke will return no more, or
You imagine me too unhurtful an opposite. Shakspeare.

But there was challenge made whose it might be. Bp. Hall, Sat. iii. 1.

U'NICORN. n. s. [unicornis, unus and cornu, Latin.]

1. A beast, whether real or fabulous, that has only one horn.

Wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee. Shakspeare, Timon.

Unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
Bears with glasses, men with flatterers. Shakspeare.

Nature in cornigerous animals hath placed the horns inverted upwards, as in the rhinoceros, Indian ass, and unicorn beetles. Brown, Vulg. Err.

It is not of consequence, that because Dioscorides hath made no mention of unicorn's horn, there is therefore no such thing in nature. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Some unicorns we will allow even among insects, as those nasicornous beetles described by Muffetus. Brown.

Will the fierce unicorn thy voice obey,
Stand at the crib, and feed upon the hay? Sandys.

2. A bird.

Of the unicorn bird, the principal marks are these; headed and footed like the dunghill cock, tailed like a goose, horned on his forehead, with some likeness, as the unicorn is pictured; spur'd on his wings, bigger than a swan. Grew.

Unide'al.* adj. Not ideal; real.

Some will be discovered at a window by the road side, rejoicing when a new cloud of dust gathers toward them, as at the approach of a momentary supply of conversation, and a short relief from the tediousness of unideal vacancy. Johnson, Rambler, No. 135.

Unje'alous.* adj. Not suspiciously fearful; having no unreasonable mistrust.

The indulgence, under which they enjoy present ease, is founded on the gentle and unjealous temper of the king, which may be shaken and changed by several accidents, that may fall out. Clarendon, Papal Usurp. vol. i. ch. 10.

U'niform. adj. [unus and forma.]

2. Conforming to one rule; acting in the same manner; agreeing with each other.

The only doubt is about the manner of their unity, how far churches are bound to be uniform in their ceremonies, and what way they ought to take for that purpose. Hooker.

Creatures of what condition soever, though each in different manner, yet all with uniform consent, admire her, as the mother of their peace and joy. Hooker.

Numbers, being neither uniform in their designs, nor direct in their views, neither could manage nor maintain the power they got. Swift.

U'niform.* n. s. The regimental dress of a soldier.

Unifo'rmity. n. s. [uniformité, Fr.]

1. Resemblance to itself; even tenour.

There is no uniformity in the design of Spenser; he aims at the accomplishment of no one action. Dryden.

Queen Elizabeth was remarkable for that steadiness and uniformity which ran through all her actions. Addison.

2. Conformity to one pattern; resemblance of one to another.

The unity of that visible body and church of Christ, consisteth in that uniformity, which all the several persons thereunto belonging have, by reason of that one Lord, whose servants they all profess themselves; that one faith which they all acknowledge; that one baptism wherewith they are all initiated. Hooker.

The great council of Nice ordained that there should be a constant uniformity in this case. Nelson.

U'niformly. adv. [from uniform.]

1. Without variation; in an even tenour.

That faith received from the Apostles, the church, though dispersed throughout the world, doth notwithstanding keep as safe as if it dwelt within the walls of some one house, and as uniformly hold, as if it had but one only heart and soul. Hooker.

The capillaments of the nerves are each of them solid and uniform; and the vibrating motion of the ethereal medium may be propagated along them from one end to the other uniformly, and without interruption. Newton. Opt.

2. Without diversity of one from another.

If there be any place upon earth of that nature that paradise had, the same must be found within that supposed uninhabitable burnt zone, or within the tropicks. Ralegh.

Had not the deep been form'd, that might contain
All the collected treasures of the main;
The earth had still o'erwhelm'd with water stood,
To man an uninhabitable flood. Blackmore.

UNINHA'BITABLENESS. n. s. Incapacity of being inhabited.

Divers radicated opinions, such as that of the uninhabitableness of the torrid zone, of the solidity of the celestial part of the world, are generally grown out of request. Boyle.

UNINHA'BITED. adj. Having no dwellers.

The whole island is now uninhabited. Sandys.

Uninhabited, untill'd, unsown
It lies, and breeds the bleating goat alone. Pope.

I cast anchor on the leeside of the island, which seemed to be uninhabited. Swift.

UNI'NJURED. adj. Unhurt; suffering no harm.

You may as well spread out the unsunn'd heaps
Of miser's treasure by an outlaw's den,
And tell me it is safe; as bid me hope
Danger will let an helpless maiden pass,
Uninjur'd in this wild, surrounding waste. Milton, Comus.

Then in full age, and hoary holiness,
Retire, great teacher! to thy promis'd bliss:
Untouch'd thy tomb, uninjur'd be thy dust,
As thy own fame among the future just. Prior.

UNINQUI'SITIVE.* adj. Not curious to know; not inquisitive; not prying.

Of those who participate in your councils, have I many times heard, not uninquisitive, I acknowledge, how attentively you revolve things propounded. Wotton, Rem. p. 153.

It was an ingenuous, uninquisitive time. Bp. Hurd.

UNINSCRI'BED. adj. Having no inscription.

And uninstructed how to stem the tide. Dryden.

It will be a prejudice to none but widows and orphans, and others, uninstructed in the arts and management of more skilful men. Locke.

It is an unspeakable blessing to be born in those parts where wisdom flourishes, though there are even in these parts several poor, uninstructed persons. Addison.

Though we find few amongst us, who profess themselves Anthropomorphites, yet we may find, amongst the ignorant and uninstructed Christians, many of that opinion. Locke.

UNINSTRU'CTIVE. adj. Not conferring any improvement.

Were not men of abilities thus communicative, their wisdom would be in a great measure useless, and their experience uninstructive. Addison.

UNINTE'LLIGENT. adj. Not knowing, not skilful; not having any consciousness.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses may be unintelligent of our insufficience. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The visible creation is far otherwise apprehended by the philosophical enquirer, than the unintelligent vulgar. Glanville.

This conclusion, if men allow'd of, they would not destroy ill-formed productions. Ay, but these monsters. Let them be so; what will your drivelling, unintelligent, untractable, changeling be? Locke.

Why then to works of nature is assign'd
An author unintelligent and blind;
When ours proceed from choice? Blackmore.

The obvious products of unintelligent nature. Bentley.

UNINTELLIGIBI'LITY. n. s. Quality of not being intelligible.

Credit the unintelligibility of this union and motion. Glanville.

If we have truly proved the unintelligibility of it in all other ways, this argumentation is undeniable. Burnet.

UNINTE'LLIGIBLE. adj. [inintelligible, Fr.] Not such as can be understood.

The Latin, three hundred years before Tully, was as unintelligible in his time, as the English and French of the same period are now. Swift.

Did Thetis
These arms thus labour'd for her son prepare;
For that dull soul to stare with stupid eyes,
On the learn'd unintelligible prize! Dryden.

This notion must be despised as harmless, unintelligible enthusiasm. Rogers.

UNINTE'LLIGIBLENESS.* n. s. State of being unintelligible.

I require our theorist to shew us some inconvenience or unintelligibleness in the one more than in the other. Bp. Herb. Croft on Burnet's Theory, (1685,) p. 73.

UNINTE'LLIGIBLY. adv. In a manner not to be understood.

Sound is not unintelligibly explained by a vibrating motion communicated to the medium. Locke.

To talk of specifick differences in nature, without reference to general ideas, is to talk unintelligibly. Locke.

UNINTE'NTIONAL. adj. Not designed; happening without design.

Besides the unintentional deficiencies of my style, I have purposely transgressed the laws of oratory, in making my periods over-long. Boyle.

U'NION. n. s. [unio, Latin.]

1. The act of joining two or more, so as to make them one.

Adam, from whose dear side I boast me sprung,
And gladly of our union hear thee speak,
One heart, one soul in both! Milton, P. L.

One kingdom, joy, and union without end. Milton, P. L.

2. Concord; conjunction of mind or interests.

The experience of those profitable emanations from God, most commonly are the first motive of our love; but when we once have tasted his goodness, we love the spring for its own excellency, passing from considering ourselves, to an union with God. Bp. Taylor, Living Holy.

3. A pearl. Not in use.

The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath;
And in the cup an union shall he throw,
Richer than that which four successive kings
In Denmark's crown have worn. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

4. [In law.] Union is a combining or consolidation of two churches in one, which is done by the consent of the bishop, the patron, and incumbent. And this is properly called an union: but there are two other sorts, as when one church is made subject to the other, and when one man is made prelate of both, and when a conventual is made cathedral. Touching union in the first signification, there was a statute, an. 37 Hen. VIII. chap. 21. that it should be lawful in two churches, whereof the value of the one is not above six pounds in the king's books, of the first fruits, and not above one mile distant from the other. Union in this signification is personal, and that is for the life of the incumbent; or real, that is, perpetual, whosoever is incumbent. Cowel.

Morn, late rising o'er the drooping world,
Lifts her pale eye unjoyous. Thomson, Winter.

UNI'PAROUS. adj. [unus and pario.] Bringing one at a birth.

Others make good the paucity of their breed with the duration of their days, whereof there want not examples in animals uniparous. Brown, Vulg. Err.

*UNIQUE. adj. [French.] Sole; without an equal; without another of the same kind known to exist: an affected and useless term of modern times.

U'NISON. adj. [unus and sonus, Latin.] Sounding alone.

Sounds intermix'd with voice
Choral, or unison. Milton, P. L.

U'NISON.† n. s.

1. A string that has the same sound with another.

When moved matter meets with any thing like that, from which it received its primary impress, it will in like manner move it, as in musical strings tuned unisons. Glanville.

2. A single unvaried note; an exact agreement of sound.

Lost was the nation's sense, nor could be found,
While a long, solemn unison went round. Pope.
Diversify'd 'midst unison of chime,
Freer than air, yet manacled with rhyme. Harte.

What old Calvin meant to be sung in unison, they chose should be performed in counterpoint, or in four parts. Mason on Ch. Musick, p. 208.

UNI'SONOUS.* adj. [from unison.] Being in unison.

These apt notes were about forty tunes, of one part only, and in one unisonous key. Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 171.

Calvin, who had certainly less musick in his soul than Luther, rejected both vocal and instrumental harmony, and admitted only unisonous psalmody. Mason on Ch. M. p. 165.

U'NIT.† n. s. [unus, unitus, Latin.]

1. One; the least number; or the root of numbers.

If any atom should be moved mechanically, without attraction, 'tis above a hundred million millions odds to an unit, that it would not strike upon any other atom, but glide through an empty interval without contact. Bentley.

Units are the integral parts of any large number. Watts.

2. A gold coin of king James I.

King James caused new coins to be made of several stamps, weights, and values; — that is to say, one piece of gold of the value of 20s. sterling, called the unite; — one other gold money of ten shillings, &c. Camden, Rem. Money.

UNI'TABLE.* adj. [from unite.] Capable of being united. Phillips.

UNITA'RIAN.* n. s. [from unity.] One of a sect allowing divinity to God the Father alone; an anti-trinitarian.

Socinians, under the name of Unitarians, have appeared with great boldness, and have — filled the nation with their numerous pamphlets, printed upon a publick stock, and given away gratis among the people, whereby many have been deluded. Leslie, Socinian Controv. Discuss. Pref.

It is by no means sufficient for their purpose that they insist not on the belief of the miraculous conception: they must insist upon the disbelief of it, if they expect to make discerning men proselytes to their Socinian doctrine: they must disprove it, before they can reduce the Gospel to what their scheme of interpretation makes it — a religion of nature — a system of the best practical deism, enforced by the sanction of high rewards and formidable punishments in a future life; which are yet no rewards and no punishments, but simply the enjoyments and the sufferings of a new race of men to be made out of old materials; and therefore constitute no sanction, when the principles of the materialist are incorporated with those of the Socinian in the finished creed of the modern unitarian. Bp. Horsley, Serm. on St. Luke, i. 28.

To UNI'TE. v. a. [unitus, Latin.]

1. To join two or more into one.

The force which wont in two to be dispersed,
In one alone right hand he now unites. Spenser.
Whatever truths
Redeem'd from error, or from ignorance,
Thin in their authors, like rich veins of ore,
Your works unite, and still discover more. Dryden.

A proposition for uniting both kingdoms was begun. Swift.

2. To make to agree.

The king proposed nothing more than to unite his kingdom in one form of worship. Clarendon.

3. To make to adhere.

The peritonæum, which is a dry body, may be united with the musculous flesh. Wiseman, Surgery.

4. To join.

In the lawful name of marrying,
To give our hearts united ceremony. Shakspeare.

Charity is of a fastening and uniting nature. Pearson.

Let the ground of the picture be well united with colours of a friendly nature. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

5. To join in interest.

Unto their assembly, mine honour be not thou united. Gen. xlix. 6.

To UNI'TE.† v. n.

1. To join in an act; to concur; to act in concert.

If you will now unite in your complaints,
And force them with a constancy, the cardinal
Cannot stand under them. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

2. To coalesce; to be cemented; to be consolidated.

3. To grow into one.

From my loins
Thou shalt proceed, and from thy womb the Son
Of God Most High; so God with Man unites. Milton, P. L.

UNI'TEDLY. adv. With union; so as to join.

The eyes, which are of a watry nature, ought to be much painted, and unitedly on their lower parts; but boldly touched above by the light and shadows. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

UNI'TER. n. s. The person or thing that unites.

Suppose an uniter of a middle constitution, that should partake of some of the qualities of both. Glanville.

UNI'TION. n. s. [union, Fr. from unite.] The act or power of uniting; conjunction; coalition. A word proper, but little used.

As long as any different substance keeps off the unition, hope not to cure a wound. Wiseman, Surgery.

U'NITIVE. adj. [from unite.] Having the power of uniting.

That can be nothing else but the unitive way of religion, which consists of the contemplation and love of God. Norris.

U'NITY. n. s. [unitas, Latin.]

1. The state of being one.

Those hereticks introduced a plurality of Gods; and so made the profession of the unity part of the symbolum, that should discriminate the orthodox from them. Hammond.

The production of one being the destruction of another, although they generate, they increase not; and must not be said to multiply, who do not transcend an unity. Brown.

Man is to beget
Like of his like; his image multiply'd:

In unity defective; which requires
Collateral love, and dearest amity. Milton, P. L.

Whatever we can consider as one thing, suggests to the understanding the idea of unity. Locke.

2. Concord; conjunction.

That which you hear, you'll swear
You see, there is such unity in the proofs. Shakspeare.

Nor can we call those many, who endeavour to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. By this, said our Saviour, shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another, and this is the unity of charity. Pearson.

Take unity then out of the world, and it dissolves into a chaos. Holyday.

We, of all Christians, ought to promote unity among ourselves and others. Sprat, Serm.

3. Agreement; uniformity.

To the avoiding of dissension, it availeth much, that there be amongst them an unity, as well in ceremonies as in doctrine. Hooker.

4. Principle of dramatick writing, by which the tenour of the story, and propriety of representation is preserved.

The unities of time, place, and action, are exactly observed. Dryden, Pref. to All for Love.

Although in poetry it be absolutely necessary that the unities of time, place, and action should be thoroughly understood, there is still something more essential, that elevates and astonishes the fancy. Addison.

5. [In law.]

Unity of possession is a joint possession of two rights by several titles. For example, I take a lease of land from one upon a certain rent; afterwards I buy the fee-simple. This is an unity of possession, whereby the lease is extinguished; by reason that I, who had before the occupation only for my rent, am become lord of the same, and am to pay my rent to none. Cowel.

UNJU'DGED. adj. Not judicially determined.

Causes unjudg'd disgrace the loaded file,
And sleeping laws the king's neglect revile. Prior.

UNIVE'RSAL. adj. [universalis, Latin.]

1. General; extending to all.

All sorrowed: if all the world could have seen't, the woe had been universal. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Appetite, an universal wolf,
So doubly seconded with will and power,
Must make perforce an universal prey,
And last eat up itself. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

Divine laws and precepts simply and formally moral, are universal, in respect of persons, and in regard of their perpetual obligation. White.

This excellent epistle, though, in the front of it, it bears a particular inscription, yet in the drift of it is universal, as designing to convince all mankind of the necessity of seeking for happiness in the gospel. South.

No subject can be of universal, hardly can it be of general concern. Reynolds.

2. Total; whole.

From harmony, from heav'nly harmony,
This universal frame began. Dryden.

3. Not particular; comprising all particulars.

From things particular
She doth abstract the universal kinds. Davies.

An universal was the object of imagination, and there was no such thing in reality. Arbuthnot and Pope.

UNIVE'RSAL. n. s. The whole; the general system of the universe. Not in use.

To what end had the angel been set to keep the entrance into Paradise after Adam's expulsion, if the universal had been paradise. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

Plato calleth God the cause and original, the nature and reason of the universal. Ralegh.

UNIVE'RSALIST.* n. s. One who affects to understand all particulars.

A modern freethinker is an universalist in speculation; any proposition whatsoever he's ready to decide; self-assurance supplies all want of abilities! Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 3.

UNIVERSA'LITY. n. s. [universalitas, school Latin.] Not particularity; generality; extension to the whole.

This catholicism, or second affection of the church, consisteth generally in universality, as embracing all sorts of persons, as to be disseminated through all nations, as comprehending all ages, as containing all necessary and saving truths, as obliging all conditions of men to all kind of obedience, as curing all diseases, and planting all graces in the souls of men. Pearson.

This catalogue of sin, is but of sin under a limitation; an universality of sin under a certain kind; that is, of all sins of direct and personal commission. South.

The universality of the deluge I insist upon: and that marine bodies are found in all parts of the world. Woodward.

A special conclusion cannot be inferred from a moral universality, nor always from a physical one; though it may be always inferred from an universality that is metaphysical. Watts.

He might have seen it in an instance or two; and he mistook accident for universality. Reynolds.

UNIVE'RSALLY. adv. [from universal.] Throughout the whole; without exception.

Those offences which are breaches of supernatural laws, violate in general that principle of reason, which willeth universally to fly from evil. Hooker.

UNLE'SS.† conjunct. [the Sax. imperative onleſ, from onleſan, to dismiss; formerly written oneles and onelesse. Mr. Horne Tooke. Skinner had before referred unless to onleſan, though not with the same application; his being that of hoc dimisso, Mr. Tooke's that of dimitte.] Except; if not; supposing that not.

Let us not say, we keep the commandments of the one, when we break the commandments of the other: for, unless we observe both; we obey neither. Hooker.

Unless I look on Sylvia in the day,
There is no day for me to look upon. Shakspeare.

What hidden strength,
Unless the strength of heaven, if you mean that? Milton, Comus.

For sure I am, unless I win in arms,
To stand excluded from Emilia's charms;
Nor can my strength avail, unless by thee,
Endu'd with force, I gain the victory. Dryden.

The commendation of adversaries is the greatest triumph of a writer, because it never comes unless extorted. Dryden.

No poet ever sweetly sung,
Unless he were, like Phœbus, young;
Nor ever nymph inspir'd to rhyme,
Unless, like Venus, in her prime. Swift.

UNLE'SSONED. adj. Not taught.

The full sum of me
Is an unlesson'd girl, unschool'd, unpractis'd;
Happy in this, she is not yet so old
But she may learn. Shakspeare.

UNLE'TTERED. adj. Unlearned; untaught.

When the apostles of our Lord were ordained to alter the laws of heathenish religion, St. Paul excepted, the rest were unschooled and unlettered men. Hooker.

How much unlook'd for is this expedition! Shakspeare.

God, I pray him,
That none of you may live your natural age,
But by some unlook'd accident cut off. Shakspeare.

Whatsoever is new is unlooked for; and ever it mends some, and pares others. Bacon.

From that high hope, to what relapse
Unlook'd for are we fall'n. Milton, P. R.

Your affairs I have recommended to the king, but with unlook'd success. Denham.

Nor fame I slight, nor for her favours call;
She comes unlook'd for, if she comes at all. Pope.

To UNLO'OSE.† v. a. To loose. A word perhaps barbarous and ungrammatical, the particle prefixed implying negation; so that to unloose, is properly to bind. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson would not have made the preceding remark, if he had known that the word is pure Saxon; unleran, solvere, to loose.

York, unloose your long-imprison'd thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart. Shakspeare.
The weak, wanton Cupid,
Shall from your neck unloose his am'rous fold;
And like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.
Turn him to any cause of policy,
The Gordian knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his garter. Shakspeare, Hen. V.
It rested in you,
To unloose this tied-up justice when you pleas'd. Shakspeare.

The latchet of his shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose. St. Mark, i. 7.

He that should spend all his time in tying inextricable knots, only to baffle the industry of those that should attempt to unloose them, would be thought not much to have served his generation. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

Without this virtue, the publick union must unloose; the strength decay; and the pleasure grow faint. Collier.

UNLO'SABLE. adj. [A word rarely used.] Not to be lost.

Whatever may be said of the unlosable mobility of atoms, yet divers parts of matter may compose bodies, that need no other cement to unite them, than the juxta-position and resting together of their parts, whereby the air, and other fluids that might dissipate them, are excluded. Boyle.

UNLO'VED. adj. Not loved.

As love does not always reflect itself, Zelmane, though reason there was to love Palladius, yet could not ever perswade her heart to yield with that pain to Palladius, as they feel, that feel unloved love. Sidney.

What though I be not fortunate;
But miserable most to love unlov'd! Shakspeare.

He was generally unloved, as a proud and supercilious person. Clarendon.

UNLO'VELINESS. n. s. Unamiableness; inability to create love.

The old man, growing only in age and affection, followed his suit with all means of unhonest servants, large promises, and each thing else that might help to countervail his own unloveliness. Sidney.

UNLO'VELY.† adj. That cannot excite love. It seems by this word generally more intended than barely negation. See UNLOVELINESS.

A beauty which on Psyche's face did throw
Unlovely blacknesse. Beaumont, P

A good wife, a tender mother, and an unmeddling queen. Ld. Chesterfield.

UNME'DDLINGNESS.* n. s. Absence of interposition or intermeddling.

These two Christian armies might combine
The blood of malice in a vein of league,
And not to spend it so unneighbourly. Shakspeare

UNNE'RVATE. adj. Weak; feeble. A bad word.

Scaliger calls them fine and lively in Musæus; but abject, unnervate, and unharmonious in Homer. Broome.

To UNNE'RVE. v. a. To weaken; to enfeeble.

The precepts are often so minute and full of circumstances, that they weaken and unnerve his verse. Addison.

UNNE'RVED. adj. Weak; feeble.

Pyrrhus at Priam drives, in rage strikes wide;
But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword,
Th' unnerv'd father falls. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

UNNE'TH. } adv. [This is from un and eað, Saxon,
UNNE'THES. } easy; and ought therefore to be written uneath; which see.] Scarcely; hardly; not without difficulty. Obsolete.

Diggon, I am so stiffe and stanke,
That unneth I may stand any more;

And how the western wind bloweth sore,
Beating the wither'd leaf from the tree. Spenser.
A shepherd's boy,
When winter's wasteful spight was almost spent,
Led forth his flocke, that had been long ypent;
So faint they waxe, and feeble in the fold,
That now unnethes their feet could them uphold. Spenser.

UNNO'BLE.† adj. Mean; ignominious; ignoble.
I have offended reputation;
A most unnoble swerving. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Benighted wanderers, the forest o'er,
Curse the sav'd candle, and unopening door. Pope.

UNO'PERATIVE. adj. Producing no effects.

The wishing of a thing is not properly the willing of it; but an imperfect velleity, and imports no more than an idle, unoperative complacency in the end, with a direct abhorrence of the means. South.

UNOPPO'SED. adj. Not encountered by any hostility or obstruction.

Proud, art thou met? thy hope was to have reach'd
The height of thy aspiring unoppos'd,
The throne of God unguarded. Milton, P. L.

To every nobler portion of the town,
The curling billows roll their restless tide:
In parties now they struggle up and down,
As armies, unoppos'd, for prey divide. Dryden.

The people, like a headlong torrent go,
And every dam they break or overflow:
But unoppos'd they either lose their force,
Or wind in volumes to their former course. Dryden.

UNO'RDERLY. adj. Disordered; irregular.

Since some ceremonies must be used, every man would have his own fashion; whereof what other would be the issue, but infinite distraction, and unorderly confusion in the church. Sanderson.

UNO'RDINARY. adj. Uncommon; unusal. Not used.

I do not know how they can be excused from murder, who kill monstrous births, because of an unordinary shape, without knowing whether they have a rational soul or no. Locke.

UNO'RGANIZED. adj. Having no parts instrumental to the motion or nourishment of the rest.

It is impossible for any organ to regulate itself: much less may we refer this regulation to the animal spirits, an unorganized fluid. Grew, Cosmol.

UNORI'GINAL. } adj. Having no birth; ungenerated.
UNORI'GINATED. }

I toil'd out my uncouth passage, forc'd to ride
The untractable abyss, plung'd in the womb
Of unoriginal night, and chaos wild. Milton, P. L.

In Scripture, Jehovah signifies, that God is underived, unoriginated, and self-existent. Stephens, Serm.

UNORNAME'NTAL.* adj. Plain; without ornament.

I cannot forbear taking notice of one other mark of integrity which appears in all the compositions of the sacred writers, and particularly the evangelists; and that is, the simple, unaffected, unornamental, and unostentatious manner, in which they deliver truths so important and sublime, and facts so magnificent and wonderful. West on the Resurrection, (4th ed.) p. 355.

UNO'RNAMENTED.* adj. Not adorned; not dressed with ornaments.

I have bestowed so many garlands upon your shrine, which till my time used to stand unornamented. Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 5.

UNOSTENTA'TIOUS.* adj. Not boastful; modest. See an example of the word under unornamental.

To tug and scramble, and to part by th' teeth
The unowed interest of proud, swelling state. Shakspeare.

UNO'WNED. adj.

1. Having no owner.

2. Not acknowledged; not claimed.

Of night or loneliness it recks me not;
I fear the dread events that dog them both,
Lest some ill-greeting touch attempt the person
Of our unowned sister. Milton, Comus.

O happy, unown'd youths! your limbs can bear
The scorching dog-star, and the winter's air;
While the rich infant, nurs'd with care and pain,
Thirsts with each heat, and coughs with ev'ry rain. Gay.

UNPACI'FICK.* adj. Not of a peaceable turn; not gentle.

Many such works of our disunited and unpacific ancestors were undoubtedly destroyed, either by their first constructors, or by new invaders, by agreement or by conquest, and sometimes by civil dissensions, in the early martial ages. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 71.

UNPA'CIFIED.* adj. Not composed; not calmed.

A westerne, mild and pretty whispering gale

Thy fate unpity'd, and thy rites unpaid? Pope.

2. Not receiving dues or debts.

How often are relations neglected, and tradesmen unpaid, for the support of this vanity? Collier.

Th' embroider'd suit, at least, he deem'd his prey;
That suit an unpaid taylor snatch'd away. Pope.

3. UNPAID for. That for which the price is not yet given; taken on trust.

Richer, than doing nothing for a bauble;
Prouder, than rustling in unpaid for silk. Shakspeare.

UNPA'INED. adj Suffering no pain.

Too unequal work we find,
Against unequal arms to fight in pain;
Against unpain'd, impassive. Milton, P. L.

UNPA'INFUL. adj. Giving no pain.

That is generally called hard, which will put us to pain, sooner than change figure; and that soft, which changes the situation of its parts, upon an easy and unpainful touch. Locke.

UNPA'LATABLE. adj. Nauseous; disgusting.

The man who laugh'd but once to see an ass
Mumbling to make the cross-grain'd thistles pass,
Might laugh again to see a jury chaw
The prickles of unpalatable law. Dryden.

A good man will be no more disturbed at the methods of correction, than by seeing his friend take unpalatable physick. Collier on Kindness.

To UNPA'RADISE.* v. a. To deprive of happiness resembling that of paradise. This is an old word: " Unparadiz'd, brought from joy to misery." Cockeram.

UNPE'TRIFIED. adj. Not turned to stone.

In many concreted plants, some parts remain unpetrified; that is, the quick and livelier parts remain as wood, and were never yet converted. Brown, Vulg. Err.

UNPHILOSO'PHICAL. adj. Unsuitable to the rules of philosophy, or right reason.

Your conceptions are unphilosophical. You forget that the brain has a great many small fibres in its texture; which, according to the different strokes they receive from the animal spirits, awaken a correspondent idea. Collier.

It became him who created them, to set them in order: and if he did so, it is unphilosophical to seek for any other origin of the world, or to pretend that it might arise out of a chaos by the mere laws of nature. Newton, Opt.

UNPHILOSO'PHICALLY. adv. In a manner contrary to the rules of right reason.

They forget that he is the first cause of all things, and discourse most unphilosophically, absurdly, and unsuitably to the nature of an infinite being; whose influence must set the first wheel a-going. South.

UNPHILOSO'PHICALNESS. n. s. Incongruity with philosophy.

I could dispense with the unphilosophicalness of this their hypothesis were it not unchristian. Norris.

To UNPHILO'SOPHIZE. v. a. To degrade from the character of a philosopher. A word made by Pope.

Our passions, our interests flow in upon us, and unphilosophize us into mere mortals. Pope.

UNPHY'SICKED.* adj. Not indebted to medicine; not influenced by medicine.

Free limbs, unphysick'd health, due appetite. Howell, Verses Pref. to his Lett.

By God's great mercy to me I enjoy at present so firm and an unphysicked health, that I hope to do somewhat before I die, that I may not seem to have lived altogether to no purpose. Cotton in Aubrey's Lett. &c. i. 20.

UNPIE'RCED. adj. Not penetrated; not pierced.

See the cirque falls! the unpillar'd temple nods!
Streets pav'd with heroes! Tiber choak'd with gods! Pope.

UNPI'LLOWED. adj. Wanting a pillow.

Perhaps some cold bank is her bolster now,
Or 'gainst the rugged bark of some broad elm,
Leans her unpillow'd head, fraught with sad fears. Milton, Comus.

To UNPI'N. v. a. To open what is shut, or fastened with a pin.

My love doth so approve him,
That even his stubbornness, his checks and frowns,
(Pr'ythee unpin me) have grace and favour in them. Shakspeare.

Unpin that spangled breast-plate which you wear,
That the eyes of busy fools may be stopt there. Donne.

Who is the honest man?
He that doth still and strongly good pursue,
To God, his neighbour, and himself most true:
Whom neither force, nor fawning can
Unpin, or wrench from giving all their due. Herbert.

UNPI'NKED. adj. Not marked with eyelet holes.

Gabriel's pumps were all unpink'd i' th' heel. Shakspeare.

UNPI'TIED. adj. Not compassionated; not regarded with sympathetical sorrow.

Richard yet lives; but at hand, at hand
Insues his piteous and unpitied end. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Rich in the world's opinion, and men's praise,
And full in all we cou'd desire, but days:
He that is warn'd of this, and shall forbear
To vent a sigh for him, or shed a tear;
May he live long scorn'd, and unpity'd fall,
And want a mourner at his funeral. Bp. Corbet.

But he whose words and fortunes disagree,
Absurd, unpity'd, grows a publick jest. Roscommon.

He that does not secure himself of a stock of reputation in his greatness, shall most certainly fall unpitied in his adversity. L'Estrange.

As the greatest curse that I can give,
Unpitied be depos'd, and after live. Dryden, Aurengz.

As some sad turtle his lost love deplores;
Thus, far from Delia, to the winds I mourn,
Alike unheard, unpity'd, and forlorn. Pope.

Passion unpity'd, and successless love,
Plant daggers in my heart, and aggravate
My other griefs. Addison, Cato.

UNPI'TIFUL.* adj.

1. Not merciful.

Figs there unplanted through the fields do grow,
Such as fierce Cato did the Romans show. Waller.

UNPLA'USIBLE. adj. Not plausible; not such as has a fair appearance.

There was a mention of granting five subsidies; and that meeting being, upon very unpopular, and unplausible reasons, immediately dissolved, those five subsidies were exacted, as if an act had passed to that purpose. Clarendon.

I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glosing courtesy,
Baited with reasons not unplausible,
Wind me into the easy-hearted man,
And hug him into snares. Milton, Comus.

UNPLA'USIVE. adj. Not approving.

'Tis like he'll question me,
Why such unplausive eyes are bent on him. Shakspeare.

UNPLEA'DABLE.* adj. Not capable to be alleged in plea.

It is a blindness brought upon a man, because he would not see; otherwise all ignorance, that is merely negative and inculpable presumption, is utterly inconsistent with, and makes absolutely unpleadable. South, Serm. vii. 202.

UNPLEA'SANT. adj. Not delighting; troublesome; uneasy.

Their skilful ears perceive certain harsh and unpleasant discords in the sound of our common prayer, such as the rules of divine harmony, such as the laws of God cannot bear. Hooker.

O sweet Portia!
Here are a few of the unpleasant'st words
That ever blotted paper. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Wisdom is very unpleasant to the unlearned. Ecclus. v. 20.

Upon Adam's disobedience, God chased him out of paradise, the most delicious part of the earth, into some other, the most barren and unpleasant. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

UNPLEA'SANTLY. adv. Not delightfully; uneasily.

We cannot boast of good-breeding, and the art of life; but yet we don't live unpleasantly in primitive simplicity and good humour. Pope.

UNPLEA'SANTNESS. n. s. Want of qualities to give delight.

As for unpleasantness of sound, if it doth happen the good of men's souls doth deceive our ears, that we note it not, or arm them with patience to endure it. Hooker.

Many people cannot at all endure the air of London, not only for its unpleasantness, but for the suffocations which it causes. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

All men are willing to skulk out of such company; the sober for the hazards, and the jovial for the unpleasantness of it. Gov. of the Tongue.

UNPLEA'SED. adj. Not pleased; not delighted.

Me rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye feel your courtesy. Shakspeare.

Condemn'd to live with subjects ever mute,
A salvage prince, unpleas'd, though absolute. Dryden.

UNPLEA'SING. adj. Offensive; disgusting; giving no delight.

Set to dress this garden:
How dares thy tongue sound this unpleasing news? Shakspeare.

Hence the many mistakes, which have made learning so unpleasing and so unsuccessful. Milton.

If all those great painters, who have left us such fair platforms, had rigorously observed it in their figures, they had made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Howe'er unpleasing be the news you bring,
I blame not you, but your imperious king. Dryden.

UNPLEA'SINGNESS.* n. s. Want of qualities to please.

It being an unseemly affront to the sequestered and veiled modesty of that sex, to have her unpleasingness bandied up and down, and aggravated, in open court. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. ii. 21.

UNPLEA'SIVE.* adj. Not pleasing.

Grief is never but an unpleasive passion; the rest have some life and contentment in them. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 108.

UNPLI'ANT. adj. Not easily bent; not conforming to the will.

The chisel hath more glory than the pencil; that being so hard an instrument, and working upon so unpliant stuff, can yet leave strokes of so gentle appearance. Wotton.

UNPLO'WED. adj. Not plowed.

Good sound land, that hath lain long unplowed. Mortimer.

To UNPLU'ME. v. a. To strip of plumes; to degrade.

Wounded, and flying from unpractis'd day. Prior.

UNPRA'ISED. adj. Not celebrated; not praised.

The land,
In antique times was savage wilderness;
Unpeopled, unmanur'd, unprov'd, unprais'd. Spenser.
If young African for fame
His wasted country freed from Punick rage,
The deed becomes unprais'd, the man at least,
And loses, though but verbal, his reward. Milton, P. R.
Nor pass unprais'd the vest and veil divine,
Which wandering foliage, and rich flow'rs entwine. Dryden.

UNPRECA'RIOUS. adj. Not dependent on another.

The stars, which grace the high expansion bright,
By their own beams, and unprecarious light,
At a vast distance from each other lie. Blackmore.

UNPRE'CEDENTED. adj. Not justifiable by any example.

The secret of all this unprecedented proceeding in their masters, they must not impute to freedom. Swift.

UNPRECI'SE.* adj. Loose; not exact.

Chatterton gave a vague unprecise explanation from his own head, or from imperfect remembrance.
Warton, Rowley Enq. p. 47.

To UNPREDI'CT. v. n. To retract prediction.

Means I must use, thou say'st: prediction else
Will unpredict, and fail me of the throne. Milton, P. R.

Defraud their clients, and to lucre sold,
Sit brooding on unprofitable gold. Dryden.

With shame and sorrow fill'd,
For plotting an unprofitable crime. Dryden.

An ox that waits the coming blow,
Old and unprofitable to the plough. Dryden.

With tears so tender,
As any heart, but only her's, could move;
Trembling before her bolted doors he stood,
And there pour'd out th' unprofitable flood. Dryden.

UNPRO'FITABLENESS. n. s. Uselessness.

We are so persuaded of the unprofitableness of your science, that you can but leave us where you find us; but if you succeed, you increase the number of your party. Addison.

UNPRO'FITABLY. adv. Uselessly; without advantage.

I shou'd not now unprofitably spend
Myself in words, or catch at empty hope,
By airy ways, for solid certainties. B. Jonson.

Our country's cause,
That drew our swords, now wrests 'em from our hands,
And bids us not delight in Roman blood
Unprofitably shed. Addison, Cato.

UNPRO'FITED. adj. Having no gain.

Be clamorous, and leap all civil bounds,
Rather than make unprofited return. Shakspeare.

UNPROJE'CTED.* adj. Not planned; not formed in the mind.

As far and wide as such heresies have reigned and raged in their time, and as woful a havock as they have made of souls, they have been often taken up at first by mere accident, or upon some slight, trivial, unprojected occasion.
South, Serm. vol. iv. S. 8.

UNPROLI'FICK. adj. Barren; not productive.

Great rains drown many insects, and render their eggs unprolifick, or destroy them. Hale.

UNPRO'MISING. adj. Giving no promise of excellence; having no appearance of value.

If he be naturally listless and dreaming, this unpromising disposition is none of the easiest to be dealt with. Locke.

An attempt as difficult and unpromising of success, as if he should make the essay, to produce some new kinds of animals out of such senseless materials. Bentley.

UNPRO'MPTED.* adj. Not dictated.

Oh no, we must not, will not, cannot part;
And my tongue talks, unprompted by my heart.
Congreve, Elegy to Cynthia.

UNREGA'RDED. adj. Not heeded; not respected; neglected.

We, ever by his might,
Had thrown to ground the unregarded right. Spenser.
Do'st see how unregarded now
That piece of beauty passes?
There was a time when I did vow
To that alone;
But mark the fate of faces. Suckling.
On the cold earth lies the unregarded king;
A headless carcass, and a nameless thing. Denham.
Me you have often counsell'd to remove
My vain pursuit of unregarded love. Dryden.

Laws against immorality have not been executed, and proclamations to inforce them, are wholly unregarded. Swift.

UNREGE'NERACY.* n. s. State of being unregenerate.

Yet in the state of unregeneracy. Hammond, Works, iv. 682.

If a sinful disposition disannul our prayers, much more a state of unregeneracy. South, Serm.

UNREGE'NERATE. adj. Not brought to a new life.

This is not to be understood promiscuously of all men, unregenerate persons, as well as regenerate. Stephens.

UNRE'GISTERED. adj. Not recorded.

Hotter hours,
Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have,
Luxuriously pick'd out. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

UNRE'INED. adj. Not restrained by the bridle.

Lest from thy flying steed unrein'd, as once
Bellerophon, though from a lower clime
Dismounted, on th' Aleian field I fall. Milton, P. L.

UNREJO'ICING.* adj. Unjoyous; gloomy; sad; dismal.

Siberia's unrejoicing wilds. Warton, Pleas. of Melancholy.

2. Having no connection with any thing.

They arise — from the purposed conciseness of the writer; who in the occasional mention of any matter unrelated, or not essential to, the dispensation, always affects a studied brevity. Warburton, Doct. of Grace, p. 78.

UNRE'LATIVE.* adj. Having no relation to, or connection with.

If you pitch upon the treaty of Munster, do not interrupt it by dipping and deviating into other books unrelative to it.
Ld. Chesterfield.

UNRE'LATIVELY.* adj. Without relation to any thing else.
They saw the measures they took, singly and unrelatively, or relatively alone to some immediate object.
Ld. Bolingbroke, Stud. of Hist. Lett. 2.

UNRELE'NTING. adj. Hard; cruel; feeling no pity.
By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
Place pitchy barrels on the fatal stake,
That so her torture may be shortened.
Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts? Shakspeare.
These are the realms of unrelenting fate;
And awful Rhadamanthus rules the state. Dryden.
False tears shall wet his unrelenting eyes,
And his glad heart with artful sighs shall heave. Smith.

UNRELIE'VABLE. adj. Admitting no succour.
As no degree of distress is unrelievable by his power, so no extremity of it is inconsistent with his compassion. Boyle.

UNRELIE'VED. adj.
1. Not succoured.
The goddess griev'd,
Her favour'd host shou'd perish unreliev'd. Dryden.
2. Not eased.
The uneasiness of unrelieved thirst is not lessened by continuance, but grows the more unsupportable. Boyle.

UNREMA'RKABLE. adj.
1. Not capable of being observed.
Our understanding, to make a complete notion, must add something else to this fleeting and unremarkable superficies, that may bring it to our acquaintance. Digby.
2. Not worthy of notice.

UNREME'DIABLE.† adj. Admitting no remedy.
He so handled it, that it rather seemed he had more come into a defence of an unremediable mischief already committed, than that they had done it at first by his consent. Sidney.
To prevent this unremediable ruin to which thou art posting, to catch thee when thou art nodding thus dangerously, with a most affectionate, compassionate compellation of "dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves." Hammond, Works, iv. 506.

UNRE'MEDIED.* adj. Not cured.
Unremedied loneliness. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. Pref.

UNREME'MBERED. adj. Not retained in the mind; not recollected.
I cannot pass unremembered, their manner of disguising the shafts of chimnies in various fashions, whereof the noblest is the pyramidal. Wotton on Architecture.

That unrememb'ring of its former pain,
The soul may suffer mortal flesh again. Dryden.

UNREME'MBRANCE. n. s. Forgetfulness; want of remembrance.
Some words are negative in their original language, but seem positive, because the negation is unknown; as amnesty, an unremembrance, or general pardon. Watts, Logick.

UNREMI'TTING.* adj. Not relaxing; not abating; persevering.
What but God?
Inspiring God! who, boundless Spirit all,
And unremitting Energy, pervades,
Adjusts, sustains, and agitates the whole. Thomson, Spring.
Loos'd be the whirlwind's unremitting sway.
Shenstone, El. 10.

UNREMO'VABLE. adj. Not to be taken away.
Never was there any woman, that with more unremovable determination gave herself to love, after she had once set before her mind the worthiness of Amphialus. Sidney.
You know the fiery quality of the duke,
How unremovable and fixt he is
In his own course. Shakspeare.

UNREMO'VABLENESS.* n. s. Impracticability of being removed.
Methinks I hear the soldiers, and busy officers, when they were rolling that other weighty stone, (for such we probably conceive,) to the mouth of the vault, with much toil, and sweat, and breathlessness, how they bragged of the sureness of the place and unremovableness of that load!
Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

UNREMO'VABLY. adv. In a manner that admits no removal.
His discontents are unremovably coupled to his nature.
Shakspeare.

UNREMO'VED. adj.

UNREPA'ID. adj. Not recompensed; not compensated.
Hadst thou full pow'r
To measure out his torments by thy will;
Yet what couldst thou, tormentor, hope to gain?
Thy loss continues, unrepaid by pain. Dryden.

UNREPE'ALED. adj. Not revoked; not abrogated.
When you are pinched with any unrepealed act of parliament, you declare you will not be obliged by it. Dryden.
Nature's law, and unrepeal'd command,
That gives to lighter things the greatest height. Blackmore

UNREPE'NTANCE.* n. s. State of being unrepentant.
The necessity of destruction, consequent upon unrepentance, is drawn chiefly from the determination of the Divine Will, which hath so appointed it. Wharton, Serm. i. 371.

UNREPE'NTED. adj. Not expiated by penitential sorrow.
They are no fit supplicants to seek his mercy in the behalf of others, whose own, unrepented sins provoked his just indignation. Hooker.
If I, vent'ring to displease
God for the fear of man, and man prefer,
Set God behind: which in his jealousy
Shall never, unrepented, find forgiveness. Milton, S. A.
As in unrepented sin she dy'd,
Doom'd to the same bad place, is punish'd for her pride.
Dryden.
With what confusion will he hear all his unrepented sins produced before men and angels? Rogers.

UNREPE'NTING. } adj. Not repenting; not penitent;
UNREPE'NTANT. } not sorrowful for sin.
Should I of these the liberty regard,
Who freed, as to their ancient patrimony,
Unhumbled, unrepentant, unreform'd,
Headlong would follow. Milton, P. R.
My unprepar'd, and unrepenting breath,
Was snatch'd away by the swift hand of death. Roscommon.
All his arts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden.
Nor tyrants fierce, that unrepenting die,
E'er felt such rage as thou. Pope, Rape of the Lock.

UNREPI'NING. adj. Not peevishly complaining.
Barefoot as she trod the flinty pavement,
Her footsteps all along were mark'd with blood;
Yet silent on she pass'd, and unrepining. Rowe.

UNREPI'NINGLY.* adv. Without peevish complaint.
His indisputable will must be done, and unrepiningly received by his own creatures, who is the Lord of all nature, and of all fortune, when he taketh now one, and then another; till the expected day, wherein it shall please him to dissolve the whole, and to wrap up even the heaven itself as in a scroll of parchment. Wotton, Rem. p. 322.

UNREPLE'NISHED. adj. Not filled.

Some air retreated thither, kept the mercury out of the unreplenished space. Boyle.

UNREPRIE'VABLE. adj. Not to be respited from penal death.

Within me is a hell; and there the poison
Is, as a fiend, confin'd, to tyrannize
In unreprievable condemned blood. Shakspeare, K. John.

UNREPRIE'VED.* adj. Not respited from penal death.

There to converse with everlasting groans,

You hath he reconciled, to present you holy, unblameable, and unreprovable in his sight. Col. i. 22.

UNREPRO'VED. adj.

1. Not censured.

Christians have their churches, and unreproved exercise of religion. Sandys, Trav.

2. Not liable to censure.

The antique world, in his first flowering youth,
With gladsome thanks, and unreproved truth,
The gifts of sovereign bounty did embrace. Spenser.
If I give thee honour due,
Mirth, admit me of thy crew,
To live with her, and live with thee,
In unreproved pleasures free. Milton, L'All.

UNREPU'GNANT. adj. Not opposite.

When Scripture doth yield us natural laws, what particular order is thereunto most agreeable; when positive, which way to make laws repugnant unto them. Hooker.

UNRE'PUTABLE. adj. Not creditable.

When we see wise men examples of duty, we are convinced that piety is no unreputable qualification, and that we are not to be ashamed of our virtue. Rogers.

UNREQUE'STED. adj. Not asked.

With what security can our ambassadors go, unrequested of the Turkish emperor, without his safe conduct? Knolles.

UNREQUI'TABLE. adj. Not to be retaliated.

Some will have it that all mediocrity of folly is foolish, and because an unrequitable evil may ensue, an indifferent convenience must be omitted. Brown, Vulg. Err.

So unrequitable is God's love, and so insolvent are we, that that love vastly improves the benefit, by which alone we might have pretended to some ability of retribution. Boyle.

UNRESE'NTED. adj. Not regarded with anger.

The failings of these holy persons, passed not unresented by God; and the same scripture which informs us of the sin, records the punishment. Rogers.

UNRESE'RVE.* n. s. Absence of reserve; frankness; openness.

With these he [Dr. Bathurst] lived in the freedom of social unreserve, tempering the rigour of an authoritative character with the affability of a companion, and the graces of an agreeable conversation. Warton, Life of Bathurst, p. 86.

UNRESE'RVED. adj.

1. Not limited by any private convenience.

The piety our heavenly Father will accept, must consist in an entire, unreserved obedience to his commands; since whosoever offends in one precept, is guilty of the whole law. Rogers.

2. Open; frank; concealing nothing.

UNRESE'RVEDLY. adv.

1. Without limitations.

I am not to embrace absolutely and unreservedly the opinion of Aristotle. Boyle.

2. Without concealment; openly.

I know your friendship to me is extensive; and it is what I owe to that friendship, to open my mind unreservedly to you. Pope.

UNRESE'RVEDNESS.† n. s.

1. Unlimitedness; largeness.

The tenderness and unreservedness of his love, made him think those his friends or enemies, that were so to God. Boyle.

2. Openness; frankness.

The freedom and unreservedness, with which Boileau and Racine communicated their works to each other, is hardly to be paralleled. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

I write with more unreservedness than ever man wrote. Pope.

UNRESI'STED. adj.

1. Not opposed.

The ætherial spaces are perfectly fluid; they neither assist, nor retard, the planets, which roll through as free and unresisted, as if they moved in a vacuum. Bentley, Serm.

2. Resistless; such as cannot be opposed.

Those gods! whose unresisted might
Have sent me to these regions void of light. Dryden.
What wonder then, thy hairs should feel
The conquering force of unresisted steel? Pope.

UNRESI'STIBLE.* adj. Not to be resisted.

Such a destruction as should, like a flood, overwhelm the whole nation; and, as an unresistible torrent, break down and wash all away before it. Mede on Dan. p. 34.

The martyrs, with the unresistible might of weakness, shaking the powers of darkness. Milton, of Ref. in Engl. B. 1.

UNRESI'STING. adj. Not opposing; not making resistance.

The sheep was sacrific'd on no pretence,
But meek and unresisting innocence:
A patient useful creature. Dryden.

Since the planets move horizontally through the liquid and unresisting spaces of the heavens, where no bodies at all, or inconsiderable ones, occur, they may preserve the same velocity which the first impulse impress'd. Bentley.

UNRESO'LVABLE. adj. Not to be solved; insoluble.

For a man to run headlong, while his ruin stares him in the face; still to press on to the embraces of sin, is a problem unresolvable upon any other ground, but that sin infatuates before it destroys. South.

UNRESO'LVED. adj.

1. Not determined; having made no resolution: sometimes with of.

On the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy: to our shores
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back. Shakspeare.
Turnus unresolv'd of flight,
Moves tardy back, and just recedes from fight. Dryden.

2. Not solved; not cleared.

I do not so magnify this method, to think it will perfectly clear every hard place, and leave no doubt unresolved. Locke.

UNRESO'LVING. adj. Not resolving; not determined.

She her arms about her unresolving husband threw. Dryden.

UNRESPE'CTABLE.* adj. Not entitled to respect. Malone.

UNRESPE'CTED.* adj. Not regarded.

They live unwoo'd, and unrespected fade. Shakspeare, Sonn. 54.

When all this outward shew of state shall be gone off the stage, it may peradventure prove for the good only of some unrespected, unthought-of souls, who had least part in all this mask. Hales, Rem. p. 186.

UNRESPE'CTIVE.† adj.

1. Inattentive; taking little notice.

I will converse with iron-witted fools,
And unrespective boys; none are for me
That look into me with considerate eyes. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

2. Mean; despicable. Malone.

Nor the remainder viands
We do not throw in unrespective sieve,
Because we now are full. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

UNRE'SPITED.* adj. Admitting no respite, pause, or intermission.

There to converse with everlasting groans,
Unrespited, unpitied, unrepriev'd,
Ages of hopeless end. Milton, P. L.

Unre'st.† n. s. [onraste, Teut.] Disquiet; want of tranquillity; unquietness.

Of thouht cometh the wakyngys and unrestis.
Ld. Rivers, Dictes, &c. of the Philosophers, (1477,) B. vi.

Wise behest, those creeping flames by reason to subdue,
Before their rage grew to so great unrest. Spenser.

Repose, sweet gold, for their unrest,
That have their alms out of the empress' chest. Shakspeare.

Dismay'd confusion all possess'd;
Th' afflicted troop, hearing their plot descry'd:
Then runs amaz'd distress, with sad unrest,
To this, to that, to fly, to stand, to hide. Daniel.

Silence, in truth, would speak my sorrows best;
For deepest wounds can least their feelings tell;
Yet, let me borrow from mine own unrest,
But time to bid him, whom I lov'd, farewell. Wotton.

Up they rose
As from unrest; and each the other viewing,
Soon found their eyes how open'd, and their minds
How darken'd! Milton, P. L.

O, if the foolish race of men, who find
A weight of cares still pressing on their mind,
Could find as well the cause of this unrest,
Sure they would change their course. Dryden, Lucret.

Unresto'red.† adj.

1. Not restored.

Then countries stoll'n, and captives unrestor'd,
Give strength to every blow, and edge his sword.
Addison, Ver. to the King.

2. Not cleared from an attainder.

The son of an unrestored traitor has no pretences to the quality of his ancestors. Collier on Duelling.

3. Not cured.

If unrestor'd by this, despair of cure. Young, Night Th. 2.

Unrestra'ined. adj.

1. Not confined; not hindered.

My tender age, in luxury was train'd,
With idle ease, and pageants entertain'd,
My hours my own, my pleasures unrestrain'd. Dryden.

2. Licentious; loose.

The taverns he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained, loose companions. Shakspeare.

3. Not limited.

Were there in this aphorism an unrestrained truth, yet were it not reasonable to infer from a caution, a non-usance, or abolition. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Unretra'cted. adj. Not revoked; not recalled.

The penitence of the criminal may have numbered him amongst the saints, when our unretracted uncharitableness may send us to unquenchable flames. Gov. of the Tongue.

Nothing but plain malevolence can justify disunion. Malevolence shewn in a single, outward act, unretracted, or in habitual ill-nature. Collier on Friendship.

Unreve'aled. adj. Not told; not discovered.

Had ye once seen these her celestial treasures,
And unrevealed pleasures,
Then would ye wonder, and her praises sing. Spenser.

Dear, fatal name! rest ever unreveal'd;
Nor pass these lips, in holy silence seal'd. Pope.

Unreve'nged. adj. Not revenged.

So might we die, not envying them that live;
So would we die, not unrevenged all. Fairfax.

Unhonour'd though I am,
Not unreveng'd that impious act shall be. Dryden.

Great Pompey's shade complains that we are slow,
And Scipio's ghost walks unreveng'd amongst us. Addison.

Unre'verend.† } adj. Irreverent; disrespectful.
Unre'verent. }

See not your bride in these unreverend robes. Shakspeare.

Fie! unreverend tongue! to call her bad,
Whose sovereignty so oft thou hast preferr'd,
With twenty thousand soul-confirming oaths. Shakspeare.

Shall others' superstition make us unreverent?
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 314.

Unre'verently. adv. Disrespectfully.

I did unreverently blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou snore for thyself. B. Jonson.

Unreve'rsed. adj. Not revoked; not repealed.

She hath offer'd to the doom,
Which unreversed stands in effectual force,
A sea of melting tears. Shakspeare.

Unrevo'ked. adj. Not recalled.

Hear my decree, which unrevok'd shall stand. Milton, P. L.

Unrewa'rded. adj. Not rewarded; not recompensed.

Providence takes care that good offices may not pass unrewarded. L'Estrange.

Since for common good I yield the fair,
My private loss let grateful Greece repair;
Nor unrewarded let your prince complain,
That he alone has fought and bled in vain. Pope.

To Unri'ddle. v. a. To solve an enigma; to explain a problem.

Some kind power unriddle where it lies,
Whether my heart be faulty, or her eyes! Suckling.

The Platonick principles will not unriddle the doubt.
Glanville.

A reverse often clears up the passage of an old poet, as the poet often serves to unriddle the reverse. Addison.

Unri'ddler.* n. s. One who solves an enigma.

Ye safe unriddlers of the stars, pray tell,
By what name shall I stamp my miracle?
Lovelace, Luc. Posth. p. 68.

Unridi'culous. adj. Not ridiculous.

If an indifferent and unridiculous object could draw this austereness unto a smile, he hardly could with perpetuity resist proper motives thereof. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To Unri'g. v. a. To strip of the tackle.

Rhodes is the sovereign of the sea no more;
Their ships unrigg'd, and spent their naval store. Dryden.

Unri'ght.† adj. [unꞃiht, Saxon.] Wrong. In Spenser, this word should perhaps be untight.

What in most English writers useth to be loose, and as it were unright, in this author is well grounded, timely framed, and strongly trussed up together. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Pref. to.

Shew that thy judgement is not unright. Wisdom, xii.

Unri'ghteous.† adj. [unꞃihꞇpiꞅ, Sax. See Righteous.] Unjust; wicked; sinful; bad.

Octavius here lept into his room,
And it usurped by unrighteous doom;
But he his title justify'd by might. Spenser.

Within a month!
Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears,
Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,
She married. — Oh most wicked speed! Shakspeare.

Let the wicked man forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord. Isa. lv.

Unri'ghteously. adv. Unjustly; wickedly: sinfully.

For them
Their foes a deadly Shibboleth devise:
By which unrighteously it was decreed,
That none to trust or profit should succeed,
Who would not swallow first a pois'nous wicked weed.
Dryden.

A man may fall undeservedly under publick disgrace, or is unrighteously oppressed. Collier on Pride.

Unri'ghteousness.† n. s. [unꞃihꞇpiꞅneꞅꞅe, Saxon.] Wickedness; injustice.

Our Romanists can no more abide this proposition converted, than themselves. All sin, say they, is a transgression of the law; but every transgression of the law is not sin. The apostle, therefore, turns it for us: all unrighteousness, says he, is sin; but every transgression of the law is unrighteousness, saith Austin upon this place. Bp. Hall.

Some things have a natural deformity in them, as perjury, perfidiousness, unrighteousness, and ingratitude. Tillotson.

UNRI'GHTFUL. adj. Not rightful; not just.

Thou, which know'st the way
To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again
To pluck him headlong from th' usurped throne. Shakspeare.

To UNRI'NG. v. a. To deprive of a ring.

Be forc'd to impeach a broken hedge,
And pigs unring'd at vis. franc. pledge. Hudibras.

UNRI'OTED.* adj. Free from rioting; not disgraced by riot.

A chaste unrioted house, and never stain'd
With her lord's fortune. May, Lucan, B. 9.

To UNRI'P. v. a. [This word is improper; there being no difference between rip and unrip; and the negative particle is therefore of no force; yet it is well authorized.] To cut open.

Like a traitor,
Didst break that vow, and, with thy treach'rous blade,
Unrip'dst the bowels of thy sov'reign's son. Shakspeare.

He could not now, with his honour, so unrip, and put a lye upon all that he had said and done before, as to deliver him up. Bacon, Hen. VII.

We are angry with searchers, when they break open trunks, and unrip packs, and open sealed letters. Bp. Taylor.

Cato well observes, that friendship ought not to be unripped, but unstitched. Collier.

UNRI'PE.† adj. [unripe, Sax.]

1. Immature; not fully concocted.

Purpose is of violent birth, but poor validity;
Which now, like fruits unripe, sticks on the tree,
But fall unshaken when they mellow be. Shakspeare.

In this northern tract our hoarser throats,
Utter unripe and ill-constrained notes. Waller.

2. Not seasonable; not yet proper.

He fix'd his unripe vengeance to defer,
Sought not the garden, but retir'd unseen,
To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen. Dryden.

3. Too early.

Who hath not heard of the valiant, wise, and just Dorilaus, whose unripe death doth yet, so many years since, draw tears from virtuous eyes? Sidney.

UNRI'PENED. adj. Not matured.

Were you with these, you'd soon forget
The pale, unripen'd beauties of the north. Addison, Cato.

UNRI'PENESS. n. s. Immaturity; want of ripeness.

The ripeness, or unripeness, of the occasion, must ever be well weighed; and generally it is good to commit the beginnings of all great actions to Argus, with his hundred eyes; and the ends to Briareus, with his hundred hands. Bacon.

UNRI'VALLED. adj.

1. Having no competitor.

Honour forbid! at whose unrivall'd shrine,
Ease, pleasure, virtue, all our sex resign. Pope.

2. Having no peer or equal.

To UNRI'VET. v. a. To unfasten the rivets of; to loosen.

There was a necessity to unrivet those usurpations. Hale, H. P. C. ch. 10.

To UNRO'BE. v. a. To undress; to disrobe.

When, on the exit, souls are bid to unrobe. Young, Night Th. 4.

To UNRO'L. v. a. To open what is rolled or convolved.

O horror!
The queen of nations, from her ancient seat,
Is sunk for ever in the dark abyss;
Time has unroll'd her glories to the last,
And now clos'd up the volume. Dryden, All for Love.

UNROMA'NTICK. adj. Contrary to romance.

It is a base, unromantick spirit not to wait on you. Swift.

To UNRO'OF. v. a. To strip off the roof or covering of houses.

The rabble should have first unroof'd the city,
Ere so prevail'd with me. Shakspeare, Coriol.

UNRO'OSTED. adj. Driven from the roost.

Thou dotard! thou art woman-tir'd, unroosted,
By thy old dame Partlet here. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

To UNRO'OT. v. a. To tear from the roots; to extirpate; to eradicate.

Since you've made the days and nights as one,
To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold; you do so grow in my requital,
That nothing can unroot you. Shakspeare.

Unroot the forest oaks, and bear away
Flocks, folds, and trees, an undistinguish'd prey. Dryden.

To UNRO'OT. v. n. To be unrooted.

Make their strengths totter, and their topless fortunes
Unroot and reel to ruin. Beaum. and Fl. Bonduca.

UNRO'UGH.† adj. [unruh, Sax. non hirsutus.] Smooth; unbearded.

Siward's son,
And many unrough youths, that even now
Protest their first of manhood. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

UNRO'UNDED. adj. Not shaped; not cut to a round.

Those unfil'd pistolets,
That more than cannon-shot avails or lets;
Which negligently left unrounded, look
Like many-angled figures in the book
Of some dread conjurer. Donne.

UNRO'UTED.* adj. Not thrown into disorder.

One strong squadron
Stands firm, and yet unrouted. Beaum. and Fl. Prophetess.

UNRO'YAL. adj. Unprincely; not royal.

Where'er he guides his finny coursers,
The waves unruffle, and the sea subsides. Dryden.

UNRU'FFLED. adj. Calm; tranquil; not tumultuous.

Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its shock,
Calm and unruffled as a summer's sea,
When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface. Addison.

UNRU'LED. adj. Not directed by any superior power.

The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging surges, unruled and undirected of any; for they to whom she was committed, fainted in their labour, or forsook their charge. Spenser.

UNRU'LINESS. n. s. [from unruly.] Turbulence; tumultuousness; licentiousness.

By the negligence of some who were hardly to be commanded, and by the unruliness of others, who without leave were gone ashore, so fair an occasion of victory was neglected. Knolles.

No care was had to curb the unruliness of anger, or the exorbitance of desire. Amongst all their sacrifices they never sacrificed so much as one lust. South.

UNRU'LY. adj. Turbulent; ungovernable; licentious; tumultuous.

In sacred bands of wedlock ty'd
To Theron, a loose unruly swain;
Who had more joy to range the forest wide,
And chace the savage beast with busy pain. Spenser.

Down I come, like glist'ring Phaeton,
Wanting the manage of unruly jades. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

The best and soundest of his time hath been but rash; then must we look from his age, to receive but unruly waywardness. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The tongue is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. Ja. iii.

UNSE'TTLEDNESS.† n. s.

1. Irresolution; undetermined state of mind.

Whence comes that main imperfection of our lives, unsettledness, and flitting from one thing to another, frequently relapsing into sins once forsaken? Whence are we so easily carried with every wind of fear, hope, commodity? All is, because we are not yet resolved. Hales, Rem. p. 246.

Religion and the terms of happiness are constant and settled; therefore there can be no way to constant comfort in the one, or hopes in the other, but by being constant to ourselves and to our duty; nor can there be any cause of uncertainty, but the unsettledness of our own hearts. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

2. Uncertainty; fluctuation.

The unsettledness of my condition has hitherto put a stop to my thoughts concerning it. Dryden.

3. Want of fixity.

When the sun shines upon a river, though its waves roll this way and that by the wind, yet for all their unsettledness, the sun strikes them with a direct and certain beam. South.

UNSE'TTLEMENT.* n. s. Unsettledness; irresolution.

For want of faith enduing us with such knowledge, all human wisdom was so blind and lame, so various, so uncertain, nothing but confusion, unsettlement, and dissatisfaction arising from mere ratiocination. Barrow on the Creed.

UNSE'VERED. adj. Not parted; not divided.

Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends,
I' th' war do grow together. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Their bands, though slack, no dissolution fear;
Th' unsever'd parts the greatest pressure bear;
Though loose and fit to flow, they still cohere. Blackmore.

To UNSE'X. v. a. To make otherwise than the sex commonly is.

All you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here,
And fill me, from the crown to th' toe, top full
Of direst cruelty. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To UNSHA'CKLE. v. a. To loose from bonds.

A laudable freedom of thought unshackles their minds from the narrow prejudices of education, and opens their eyes to a more extensive view of the publick good. Addison.

That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

UNSHA'KEN. adj.

1. Not agitated; not moved.

Purpose is
Of violent birth, but poor validity;
Which now, like fruits unripe, sticks on the tree,
But fall unshaken, when they mellow be. Shakspeare.
The wicked's spite against God, is but like a madman's running his head against the wall, that leaves the wall unshaken, but dashes his own brains out. Boyle.

2. Not subject to concussion.

3. Not weakened in resolution; not moved.

Ill wast thou shrouded then,
O patient Son of God! yet only stood'st
Unshaken. Milton, P. R.
Employ it in unfeigned piety towards God, in unshaken duty to his vicegerent. Sprat.
His principles were founded in reason, and supported by virtue, and therefore did not lie at the mercy of ambition: his notions were no less steady and unshaken, than just and upright. Addison.

UNSHA'MED. adj. Not shamed.

The brave man seeks not popular applause;
Unsham'd, though foil'd, he does the best he can:
Force is of brutes, but honour is of man. Dryden.

And dull to all proceedings. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

UNSHA'PEN.† adj. [Sax. unȝeꞅceapen.] Mishapen; deformed.

This unshapen earth we now inhabit, is the form it was found in when the waters had retired. Burnet.
Gasping for breath th' unshapen Phocæ die,
And on the boiling wave extended lie. Addison.

UNSHA'RED. adj. Not partaken; not had in common.

Bliss, as thou hast part, to me is bliss;
Tedious unshar'd with thee, and odious soon. Milton, P. L.

To UNSHE'ATH. v. a. To draw from the scabbard.

Executioner, unsheath thy sword. Shakspeare.
Mowbray, the bishop Scroop, Hastings, and all
Are brought to the correction of your law:
There is not now a rebel's sword unsheath'd. Shakspeare.
Far hence be souls profane!
Now, Trojan, take the way thy fates afford;
Assume thy courage, and unsheath thy sword. Dryden.
The Roman senate has resolv'd,
'Till time give better prospects, still to keep
The sword unsheath'd, and turn its edge on Cæsar. Addison.
Each chief his sev'nfold shield display'd,
And half unsheath'd the shining blade. Pope.

The first thing proposed was, whether the name Jehovah should be retained untranslated. Hales, Synod of Dort, p. 7.

UNTRANSPA'RENT. adj. Not diaphanous; opaque.

Though held against the light they appear'd of a transparent yellow, yet looked on with one's back turned to the light, they exhibited an untransparent blue. Boyle on Colours.

UNTRA'VELLED. adj.

1. Never trodden by passengers.

We find no open track, or constant manuduction in this labyrinth, but are ofttimes fain to wander in America, and untravelled parts. Brown, Pref. to Vulg. Err.

2. Having never seen foreign countries.

An untravelled Englishman cannot relish all the beauties of Italian pictures; because the postures expressed in them are often such as are peculiar to that country. Addison.

To UNTRE'AD. v. a. To tread back; to go back in the same steps.

We will untread the steps of damned flight,
And, like a bated and retired flood,
Leaving our rankness and irregular course,
Stoop low within those bounds we have o'erlook'd. Shakspeare.

UNTRE'ASURED. adj. Not laid up; not reposited.

Her attendants
Saw her a-bed, and in the morning early
They found the bed untreasur'd of their mistress. Shakspeare.

UNTRE'ATABLE. adj. Not treatable; not practicable.

Men are of so untreatable a temper, that nothing can be obtained of them. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

UNTRI'ED. adj.

1. Not yet attempted.

It behoves,
From hard essays, and ill successes past,
A faithful leader, not to hazard all
Through ways of danger, by himself untry'd. Milton, P. L.
That she no ways nor means may leave untry'd,
Thus to her sister she herself apply'd. Denham.

2. Not yet experienced.

Never more
Mean I to try, what rash untry'd I sought,
The pain of absence from thy sight. Milton, P. L.

The happiest of mankind overlooking those solid blessings which they already have, set their hearts upon somewhat which they want: some untried pleasure, which, if they could but taste, they should then be compleatly blest. Atterbury.

Self-preservation, the long acquaintance of soul and body, the untried condition of a separation, are sufficient reasons not to turn our backs upon life, out of an humour. Collier.

Eternity! thou pleasing dreadful thought!
Through what variety of untry'd being,
Through what new scenes and changes must we pass? Addison.

3. Not having passed trial.

The father secure,
Ventures his filial virtue, though untry'd,
Against whate'er may tempt. Milton, P. R.

UNTRI'UMPHABLE. adj. Which allows no triumph.

What towns, what garrisons might you,
With hazard of this blood subdue;
Which now y'are bent to throw away
In vain, untriumphable fray? Hudibras.

UNTRI'UMPHED.* adj. Not triumphed over.

I——
Suffer'd you only, when I conquer'd all,
To go untriumph'd. May, Lucan, B. 8.

UNTRO'D. } adj. Not passed; not marked by the UNTRO'DDEN. } foot.

The way he came, not having mark'd, return
Was difficult, by human steps untrod. Milton, P. R.
Now while the heaven by the sun's team untrod,
Hath took no print of the approaching light,
And all the spangled host keep watch. Milton, Ode.

A garland made of such new bays,
And sought in such untrodden ways,
As no man's temples e'er did crown. Waller.
Who was the first to explore th' untrodden path,
When life was hazarded in ev'ry step? Addison, Cato.

UNTRO'LLED. adj. Not bowled; not rolled along.

Hard fate! untroll'd is now the charming dye;
The play house and the parks unvisited must lie. Dryden.

UNTRU'E. adj.

1. False; contrary to reality.

By what construction shall any man make those comparisons true, holding that distinction untrue. Hooker.

That a vessel filled with ashes, will receive the like quantity of water, that it would have done if it had been empty, is utterly untrue, for the water will not go in by a fifth part. Bacon.

2. False; not faithful.

I cannot break so sweet a bond,
Unless I prove untrue;
Nor can I ever be so fond,
To prove untrue for you. Suckling.
Flora commands those nymphs and knights,
Who liv'd in slothful ease, and loose delights:
Who never acts of honour durst pursue,
The men inglorious knights, the ladies all untrue. Dryden.

UNTRU'LY. adv. Falsely; not according to truth.

It was their hurt untruly to attribute so great power unto false gods. Hooker.

On these mountains it is generally received that the ark rested, but untruly. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

He who is perfect, and abhors untruth,
With heavenly influence inspires my youth. Sandys.

3. Treachery; want of fidelity.

I would,
So my untruth had not provok'd him to it,
The king had cut off my head with my brother's. Shakspeare.

4. False assertion.

In matter of speculation or practice, no untruth can possibly avail the patron and defender long; and things most truly, are likewise most behovefully spoken. Hooker.

There is little hope for common justice in this dispute, from a man, who lays the foundations of his reasonings in so notorious an untruth. Atterbury.

UNTU'NABLE. adj. Unharmonious; not musical.

My news in dumb silence will I bury,
For they are harsh, untunable, and bad. Shakspeare.
A lutestring, merely unequal in its parts, giveth a harsh and untunable sound; which strings we call false. Bacon.

His harsh untunable pipe is no more fit than a raven's, to join with the musick of a choir. Tatler.

UNTU'NABLENESS.* n. s. Want of harmony.

The moderns have perhaps practised no species of poetry with so little success, and with such indisputable inferiority to the ancients, as the Ode; which seems owing to the harshness and untunableness of modern languages, abounding in monosyllables, and crowded with consonants. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

To UNTU'NE. v. a.

1. To make incapable of harmony.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
And hark what discord follows. Shakspeare.

When the last and dreadful hour,
This crumbling pageant shall devour,
The trumpet shall be heard on high,
The dead shall live, the living die,
And musick shall untune the sky. Dryden.

The captives, as their tyrant shall require,
That they should breathe the song, and touch the lyre,
Shall say; can Jacob's servile race rejoice,
Untun'd the musick, and disus'd the voice? Prior.

2. To disorder.

O you kind gods!
Cure this great breach in his abused nature;
Th' untuned and jarring senses, O wind up
Of this child-changed father. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

UNTU'RNED. adj. Not turned.

New crimes invented, left unturn'd no stone,
To make my guilt appear, and hide his own. Dryden.

So eager hath the inquisitive part of mankind been to bring this matter to a fair issue, that no stone hath been left unturned, no way, whereby these things could have been brought forth of the sea, but one or other hath pitched upon. Woodward.

UNTU'TORED. adj. Uninstructed; untaught.

Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl; and noble stock
Was graft with crab-tree slip, whose fruit thou art. Shakspeare.

Thy even thoughts with so much plainness flow,
Their sense untutor'd infancy may know:
Yet to such height is all that plainness wrought,
Wit may admire, and letter'd pride be taught. Prior.

To UNTWI'NE. v. a.

1. To open what is held together by convolution.

But since the sisters did so soon untwine
So fair a thread, I'll strive to piece the line. Waller.

2. To open what is wrapped on itself.

It turns finely and softly three or four turns, caused by the untwining of the beard by the moisture. Bacon.

3. To separate that which clasps round any thing.

Divers worthy gentlemen of England, all the Syren songs of Italy could never untwine from the mast of God's word. Ascham.

To UNTWI'ST. v. a. To separate any things involved in each other, or wrapped up on themselves.

Untwisting his deceitful clew,
He gan to weave a web of wicked guile. Spenser.

The interest of prince and people is so enfolded in a mutual embrace, that they cannot be untwisted without pulling a limb off. Bp. Taylor, Living Holy.

Untwisting all the chains that tie
The hidden soul of harmony. Milton, L'All.

No, I'll untwist you;
I have occasion for your stay on earth. Dryden.

Tarred hempen ropes cut small and untwisted, are beneficial for lands. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Untwist a wire, and from her gums
A set of teeth completely comes. Swift.

To UNTY'. v. a. [See To UNTIE.] To loose.

O time! thou must untangle this, not I:
It is too hard a knot for me to unty. Shakspeare.

Unlac'd her stays, her night-gown is unty'd,
And what she has of head-dress is aside. Young

To UNVA'IL. v. a. To uncover; to strip of a veil.

This word is unvail, or unveil, according to its etymology. See VAIL, and VEIL.

Troy reviv'd, her mourning face unvail'd. Denham.

Secure the innocence of children, by imparting to them the unvaluable blessing of a virtuous and pious education. Atterbury.

UNVA'LUED. adj.

1. Not prized; neglected.

He may not, as unvalued persons do,
Carve for himself; for on his choice depends
The safety and the health of the whole state. Shakspeare.

2. Inestimable; above price.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
Inestimable stones, unvalu'd jewels. Shakspeare.

UNVA'NQUISHABLE.* adj. Not to be subdued.

An unvanquishable fort against the impressions and assaults of all adversary forces. Bp. King, Vit. Palat. (1614,) p. 30.

UNVA'NQUISHED. adj. Not conquered; not overcome.

Shall I for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be called but viceroy of the whole? Shakspeare.

Victory doth more often fall by error of the unvanquished, than by the valour of the victorious. Hayward.

UNVA'RIABLE. adj. [invariable, Fr.] Not changeable; not mutable.

The two great hinges of morality stand fixt and unvariable as the two poles: whatever is naturally conducive to the common interest, is good; and whatever has a contrary influence, is evil. Norris.

UNVA'RIED. adj. Not changed; not diversified.

If authors cannot be prevailed with to keep close to truth, and instruction, by unvaried terms, and plain, unsophisticated arguments; yet it concerns readers not to be imposed on. Locke.

They ring round the same unvaried chimes,
With sure returns of still-expected rhymes. Pope.

UNVA'RNISHED. adj.

1. Not overlaid with varnish.

2. Not adorned; not decorated.

I will a round unvarnish'd tale deliver,
Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what charms
I won his daughter with. Shakspeare, Othello.

UNVA'RYING. adj. Not liable to change.

We cannot keep by us any standing, unvarying measure of duration, which consists in a constant fleeting succession, as we can of certain lengths of extension, as inches marked out in permanent parcels of matter. Locke.

To UNVE'IL. v. a. [See VEIL, and VAIL.]

1. To uncover; to divest of a veil.

The moon,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerless light. Milton, P. L.

To the limpid stream direct thy way,
When the gay morn unveils her smiling ray. Pope.

2. To disclose; to show.

The providence, that's in a watchful state,
Knows almost every grain of Pluto's gold;
Does ev'n our thoughts unveil in their dumb cradles. Shakspeare.

Now unveil'd the toilet stands display'd,
Each silver vase in mystick order laid. Pope.

UNVE'ILEDLY. adv. Plainly; without disguise.

Not knowing what use you will make of what has been unveiledly communicated to you, I was unwilling that some things, which had cost me pains, should fall into any man's hands, that scorns to purchase knowledge with pains. Boyle.

UNVE'NERABLE.* adj. Not worthy of respect. Mason.

For ever
Unvenerable be thy hands, if thou
Tak'st up the princess by that forced baseness
Which he hath put upon't. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

UNVE'NTILATED. adj. Not fanned by the wind.

This, animals, to succour life, demand;
Nor should the air unventilated stand;
The idle deep corrupted would contain
Blue deaths. Blackmore, Creation.

UNVE'RDANT.* adj. Having no verdure; spoiled of its green.

Ungraceful 'tis to see without a horn
The lofty hart, whom branches best adorn,
A leafless tree, or an unverdant mead,
And as ungraceful is a hairless head. Congreve, Ovid.

UNVE'RITABLE. adj. Not true.

All these proceeded upon unveritable grounds. Brown.

UNVE'RSED. adj. Unacquainted; unskilled.

Not eastern monarchs, on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple shine so gay,
As the bright natives of th' unlabour'd field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd. Blackmore.

UNVE'XED. adj. Untroubled; undisturbed.

With a blessed and unvex'd retire,
With unhack'd swords, and helmets all unbruis'd,
We will bear home that lusty blood again. Shakspeare.
Unvex'd with thought of wants which may betide;
Or for to-morrow's dinner to provide. Dryden, Juv.

UNVI'OLATED. adj. Not injured; not broken.

Herein you war against your reputation,
And draw within the compass of suspect
Th' unviolated honour of your wife. Shakspeare.

He, with singular constancy, preserved his duty and fidelity to his majesty unviolated. Clarendon.

This strength diffus'd
No less through all my sinews, joints, and bones,
Than thine, while I preserv'd these locks unshorn,
The pledge of my unviolated vow. Milton, S. A.

UNVI'RTUOUS. adj. Wanting virtue.

If they can find in their hearts that the poor, unvirtuous, fat knight shall be any further afflicted, we two will be the ministers. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

Nor this unvoyageable gulph obscure,
Detain from following thy illustrious track. Milton, P. L.

UNU'RGED. adj. Not incited; not pressed.

The time was once, when thou unurg'd would'st vow,
That never words were musick to thine ear,
Unless I spake. Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

UNU'SED. adj.

1. Not put to use; unemployed.

She whose husband about that time died, forgetting the absent Plangus, or at least, not hoping of him to attain so aspiring a purpose, left no art unused, which might keep the line from breaking, whereat the fish was already taken. Sidney.

Sure he that made us with such large discourse,
Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason,
To rust in us unus'd. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. Not accustomed.

He, unused to such entertainment, did shortly and plainly answer what he was. Sidney.

One whose eyes
Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Dropt tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakspeare, Othello.

What art thou?
Not from above: no, thy wan looks betray
Diminish'd light, and eyes unus'd to day. Dryden.

UNU'SEFUL. adj. Useless; serving no purpose.

I was persuaded, by experience, that it might not be unuseful in the capacities it was intended for. Glanville.

Birds flutter with their wings, when there is but a little down upon them, and they are as yet utterly unuseful for flying. More against Atheism.

As when the building gains a surer stay,
We take th' unuseful scaffolding away. Dryden.

Pleas'd to find his age
Declining, not unuseful to his lord. Philips.

UNU'SUAL. adj. Not common; not frequent; rare.

With this unusual and strange course they went on, till God, in whose heaviest worldly judgements I nothing doubt but that there may lie hidden mercy, gave them over to their own inventions. Hooker.

Boyle.

UNWE'APONED. adj. Not furnished with offensive arms.

As the beasts are armed with fierce teeth, paws, horns, and other bodily instruments of much advantage against unweaponed men; so hath reason taught man to strengthen his hand with such offensive arms, as no creature else can well avoid. Ralegh.

UNWE'ARIABLE. adj. Not to be tired; indefatigable.

Desire to resemble him in goodness, maketh them unweariable. Hooker.

UNWE'ARIABLY.* adv. So as not to be fatigued.

Let us earnestly and unweariably aspire thither. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 286.

UNWE'ARIED. adj.

1. Not tired; not fatigued.

The Creator from his work
Desisting, though unwearied, up return'd. Milton, P. L.
Their bloody task unweary'd, still they ply. Waller.
Still th' unweary'd sire pursues the tuneful strain. Dryden.

2. Indefatigable; continual; not to be spent; not sinking under fatigue.

He joy'd to range abroad in fresh attire,
Through the wide compass of the airy coast,
And with unwearied limbs each part t' enquire. Spenser.
Godlike his unweary'd bounty flows;
First loves to do, then loves the good he does. Denham.
A winged virtue through th' etherial sky,
From orb to orb, unweary'd dost thou fly. Tickell.

An unwearied devotion in the service of God, recommended the gospel to the world. Rogers, Serm.

The righteous shall certainly be saved, but then the Christian character of a righteous man implies a constant, unwearied perseverance in many painful instances of duty. Rogers.

UNWE'ARIEDLY.* adv. [from unwearied.] Indefatigably.

Absolute perfection is, I well know, unattainable: but I know too, that a man of parts may be unweariedly aiming at, and pretty near attain it. Ld. Chesterfield.

UNWE'ARY.* adj. [unperiz, Sax.] Not weary.

To UNWE'ARY.† v. a. To refresh after weariness.

My business here is to unweary myself, after my studyes, not to drudge. Dryden, Lett. (ed. Mal.) p. 23.

It unwearies, and refreshes more than any thing, after too great labour. Temple.

To UNWE'AVE.* v. a. To unfold; to undo what has been woven.

That I should thus unweave the web of fate,
Decrease his subjects, and subvert his state. Sandys, Chr. Pass. p. 4.

Weaving and unweaving this web, Penelope-like. Fuller, Holy War, p. 250.

UNWE'D. adj. Unmarried.

This servitude makes you to keep unwed. Shakspeare.

UNWE'DGEABLE. adj. Not to be cloven.

Merciful heav'n!
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt
Split'st the unwedgeable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

UNWEE'DED. adj. Not cleared from weeds.

Fie! 'tis an unweeded garden,
That grows to seed; things rank, and gross in nature,
Possess it merely. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

UNWEE'PED. adj. Not lamented. Now unwept.

He must not float upon his wat'ry bier
Unweept, and welter to the parching wind,
Without the meed of some melodious tear. Milton, Lycidas.

UNWEE'TING. adj. Ignorant; unknowing.

Her seeming dead he found with feigned fear,
As all unweeting of that well she knew;
And pained himself with busy care to rear
Her out of careless swoon. Spenser.
But contrary, unweeting he fulfilled
The purpos'd counsel, pre-ordain'd and fix'd,
Of the Most High. Milton, P. L.

UNWEE'TINGLY.* adv. [from unweeting.] Without knowledge; ignorantly. See UNWITTINGLY.

As by the way unweetingly I strayed. Spenser, F. Q.

UNWE'IGHED. adj.

1. Not examined by the balance.

Solomon left all the vessels unweighed, because they were exceeding many. 1 Kings, vii.

2. Not considerate; negligent.

What unweighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard pickt out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner essay me? why he hath not been thrice in my company. Shakspeare.

Daughter, what words have pass'd thy lips unweigh'd,
Deem not unjustly by my doom opprest,
Of human race the wisest, and the best. Pope, Odyss.

UNWE'IGHING. adj. Inconsiderate; thoughtless.

Wise? why, no question but he was — a very superficial, ignorant, unweighing fellow. Shakspeare.

UNWE'LCOME. adj. Not pleasing; not grateful; not well received.

Such welcome and unwelcome things at once,
'Tis hard to reconcile. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
Soon as th' unwelcome news
From earth arriv'd at heaven-gate, displeas'd
All were who heard. Milton, P. L.
Though he that brings unwelcome news
Has but a losing office, yet he that shews
Your danger first, and then your way to safety,
May heal that wound he made. Denham, Sophy.
Forc'd from her presence, and condemn'd to live;
Unwelcome freedom, and unthank'd reprieve. Dryden.

From the very first instances of perception, some things are grateful, and others unwelcome to them; some things that they incline to, and others that they fly. Locke.

Such hasty nights as these, would give very unwelcome interruptions to our labours. Bentley, Serm.

UNWE'LL.* adj. Not well; slightly indisposed; not in perfect health.

I am neither well nor ill, but unwell. Ld. Chesterfield.

UNWE'PT. adj. Not lamented; not bemoaned.

Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd;
Your widow dolours likewise be unwept. Shakspeare, Rich. III.
We, but the slaves that mount you to the throne:
A base, ignoble crowd, without a name;
Unwept, unworthy of the funeral flame;
By duty bound to forfeit each his life. Dryden.

UNWE'T. adj. Not moist.

Once I meant to meet
My fate with face unmov'd, and eyes unwet;
Yet since I have thee here in narrow room,
My tears shall set thee first afloat within thy tomb. Dryden.

UNWHI'PT. adj. Not punished; not corrected with the rod.

Tremble, thou wretch,
That hast within thee undivulged crimes,
Unwhipt of justice. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Once I caught him in a lie;
And then, unwhipt, he had the sense to cry. Pope.

UNWHO'LE.* adj. This is a Saxon expression, unhæl, non sanus, æger, &c. Not sound; sick; infirm.

UNWHO'LESOME. adj.

1. Insalubrious; mischievous to health.

The discovery of the disposition of the air, is good for the prognosticks of wholesome and unwholesome years. Bacon.

There I a prisoner chain'd, scarce freely draw
The air imprison'd also, close and damp,
Unwholesome draught; but here I find amends,
The breath of heav'n fresh-blowing, pure and sweet,
With day-spring born; here leave me to respire. Milton, S. A.

How can any one be assured, that his meat and drink are not poisoned, and made unwholesome before they are brought to him? South.

Rome is never fuller of nobility than in summer; for the country towns are so infested with unwholesome vapours, that they dare not trust themselves in them, while the heats last. Addison on Italy.

Children born healthy, often contract diseases from an unwholesome nurse. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. Corrupt; tainted.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity; this gross, wat'ry pumpion: we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakspeare.

UNWHO'LESOMENESS.* n. s. State or quality of being unwholesome.

He had made it the metropolis, had the river affected him; by whose unwholesomeness he forsook it.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 63.

UNWI'ELDILY. adv. Heavily; with difficult motion.

Unwieldily they wallow first in ooze;
Then in the shady covert seek repose. Dryden.

UNWI'ELDINESS. n. s. Heaviness; difficulty to move, or be moved.

To what a cumbersome unwieldiness,
And burdenous corpulence my love had grown,
But that I made it feed upon
That which love worst endures; discretion. Donne.

The supposed unwieldiness of its massy bulk, grounded upon our experience of the inaptitude of great and heavy bodies to motion, is a mere imposture of our senses. Glanville.

UNWI'ELDY. adj. Unmanageable; not easily moving or moved; bulky; weighty; ponderous.

An ague, meeting many humours in a fat, unwieldy body of fifty-eight years old, in four or five fits carried him out of the world. Clarendon.

Part, huge of bulk!
Wallowing unwieldy, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean. Milton, P. L.

Unwieldy sums of wealth, which higher mount,
Than files of marshal'd figures can account. Dryden.

Nothing here the unwieldy rock avails,
Rebounding harmless from the plaited scales,
That, firmly join'd, preserv'd him from a wound,
With native armour crusted all around. Addison, Ov.

What carriage can bear away all the rude and unwieldy loppings of a branchy tree at once? Watts on the Mind.

UNWI'LLING.† adj. [unpillenb, Saxon.] Loth; not contented; not inclined; not complying by inclination.

The nature of man is unwilling to continue doing that wherein it shall always condemn itself. Hooker.

If thou dost find him tractable,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons.
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

If the sun rise unwilling to his race,
Clouds on his brows, and spots upon his face,
Suspect a drizzling day. Dryden.

Heaven's unchang'd decrees attentive hear;
More pow'rful gods have torn thee from my side,
Unwilling to resign, and doom'd a bride. Dryden.

At length I drop, but in unwilling ears,
This saving counsel, keep your piece nine years. Pope.

UNWI'LLINGLY. adv. Not with good-will; not without lothness.

The whining school-boy, with his satchel,
And shining morning face, creeping like snail
Unwillingly to school. Shakspeare, As You Like It.

A feast the people hold to Dagon, and forbid
Laborious works, unwillingly this rest
Their superstition yields. Milton, S. A.

Still dismay'd
By seas or skies, unwillingly they stay'd. Denham.

These men were once the prince's foes, and then
Unwillingly they made him great: but now,
Being his friends, shall willingly undo him. Denham.

The dire contagion spreads so fast,
That where it seizes, all relief is vain;
And therefore must unwillingly lay waste
That country, which would else the foe maintain. Dryden.

UNWI'LLINGNESS. n. s. Lothness; disinclination.

Obedience, with professed unwillingness to obey, is no better than manifest disobedience. Hooker.

What moved the man to yield to her persuasions? Even the same cause that hath moved all men since; an unwillingness to grieve her, and make her sad, lest she should pine, and be overcome with sorrow. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

I see with what unwillingness
You lay upon me this command, and through your tears
Discern your love, and therefore must obey you. Denham.

There is in most people a reluctance and unwillingness to be forgotten. We observe, even among the vulgar, how fond they are to have an inscription over their grave. Swift.

To UNWI'ND.† v. a. pret. and part. passive unwound. [unpinban, Sax.]

1. To separate any thing convolved; to untwist; to untwine.

All his subjects having by some years learned, so to hope for good and fear harm, only from her, that it should have needed a stronger virtue than his, to have unwound so deeply an entered vice. Sidney.

Empirick politicians use deceit:
You boldly shew that skill which they pretend,
And work by means as noble as your end:
Which should you veil, we might unwind the clue,
As men do nature, till we came to you. Dryden.

2. To disentangle; to loose from entanglement.

Desiring to serve God as they ought; but being not so skilful as in every point to unwind themselves, where the snares of glosing speech lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invectives against that, which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy. Hooker.

As you unwind her love from him,
Lest it should ravel, and be good to none,
Bottom it on me. Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

To UNWI'ND. v. n. To admit evolution.

Put the bottoms into clean scalding water, and they will easily unwind. Mortimer, Husb.

UNWI'PED. adj. Not cleaned by rubbing.

Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their daggers, which unwip'd we found
Upon their pillows. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

UNWI'SE.† adj. [unpiꝼ, Sax.] Weak; defective in wisdom.

O good, but most unwise patricians! why,
You grave, but reckless senators, have you thus
Giv'n Hydra here to chuse an officer? Shakspeare, Coriol.

Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay. Shakspeare.

He who of those delights can judge, and spare
To interpose them oft, is not unwise. Milton, Sonnet.

This the Greeks say, this the barbarians; the wise and the unwise. Tillotson.

When kings grow stubborn, slothful, or unwise,
Each private man for publick good should rise. Dryden.

When the balance of power is duly fixt in a state, nothing is more dangerous or unwise, than to give way to the first steps of popular encroachments. Swift.

UNWI'SELY.† adv. [unpiꝼlice, Sax.] Weakly; not prudently; not wisely.

Lady Zelmane, like some, unwisely liberal, that more delight to give presents than pay debts, chose rather to bestow her love upon me, than to recompense him. Sidney.

Unwisely we the wiser East
Pity, supposing them oppress'd
With tyrant's force. Waller.

To UNWI'SH. v. a. To wish that which is, not to be.

My liege, would you and I alone,
Without more help, could fight this royal battle.——
—— Why now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men:
Which likes me better than to wish us one. Shakspeare.

To desire there were no God, were plainly to unwish their own being, which must be annihilated in the substraction of that essence, which substantially supporteth them. Brown.

UNWI'SHED. adj. Not sought; not desired.

So jealous is she of my love to her daughter, that I never yet began to open my mouth to the unevitable Philoclea, but that her unwished presence gave my tale a conclusion, before it had a beginning. Sidney.

To his unwished yoke
My soul consents not to give sov'reignty. Shakspeare.

While heaping unwish'd wealth I distant roam;
The best of brothers at his natal home,
By the dire fury of a traitress wife,
Ends the sad evening of a stormy life. Pope.

UNWI'ST.† adj.

1. Unthought of; not known.

Of hurt unwist most danger doth redound. Spenser, F. Q.

2. Applied to persons; unapprised. Mason.

He found himselfe unwist so ill bestad,
That lim he could not wag. Spenser, F. Q.

To UNWI'T. v. a. To deprive of understanding. Not used.

Friends all but now; even now
In quarter, and in terms like bride and groom
Divesting them for bed; and then but now,
As if some planet had unwitted men,
Swords out, and tilting one at other's breasts. Shakspeare.

UNWITHDRA'WING. adj. Continually liberal.

Wherefore did Nature pour her bounties forth,
With such a full and unwithdrawing hand,
Covering the earth with odours, fruits, and flocks? Milton, Comus.

UNWI'THERED.* adj. Not withered; not faded.

The roses in her cheek unwithered. Habington, Castara, p. 18.

What is in your lip
To tice the enamour'd soul to dwell with more
Ambition, than the yet unwither'd blush
That speaks the innocence of mine? Beaum. and Fl. Coronation.

UNWI'THERING.* adj. Not liable to wither or fade.

The spiry myrtle with unwithering leaf
Shines there and flourishes. Cowper, Task, B. 3.

UNWITHSTOO'D. adj. Not opposed.

Cressy plains,
And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confess
What the Silure's vigour unwithstood,
Cou'd do in rigid fight. Philips.

UNWI'TNESSED. adj. Wanting testimony; wanting notice.

Lest their zeal to the cause should any way be unwitnessed. Hooker.

UNWI'TTILY.* adv. Without wit.

This man was wanton and merry, unwittily and ungracefully merry. Cowley.

UNWI'TTINGLY.† adv. [Properly unweetingly, from unweeting. Dr. Johnson. — Yet the Saxons had unpitend for unwitting, and unpitan, to be ignorant.] Without knowledge; without consciousness.

In these fatal things it falls out that the high-working powers make second causes unwittingly accessary to their determinations. Sidney.

Those things are termed most properly natural agents, which keep the law of their kind unwittingly, as the heavens and elements of the world, which can do no otherwise than they do. Hooker.

Atheists repudiate all title to heaven, merely for present pleasure; besides the extreme madness of running such a desperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive themselves here of that tranquillity they seek for. Bentley.

UNWI'TTY.* adj. Not witty; wanting wit.

He shines, ere long, a rural squire,
Pours forth unwitty jokes, and swears,
And bawls, and drinks, but chiefly stares! Shenstone, Simile.

UNWI'VED.* adj. Without a wife.

A competent multitude of virgins might be sent over to furnish his unwived bachelors. Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 8.

She flies with eager fury to my face,
Offering me most unwomanly disgrace. Daniel, Compl. of Rosamond.

UNWO'NT.* adj. [a contraction of unwonted.] Unaccustomed; unused.

But my flowring youth is foe to frost,
My ship unwont in storms to be tost. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

UNWO'NTED. adj.

1. Uncommon; unusual; rare; infrequent.

His sad, dull eyes, sunk deep in hollow pits,
Could not endure th' unwonted sun to view. Spenser.

My father's of a better nature
Than he appears by speech; this is unwonted
Which now came from him. Shakspeare.

Every unwonted meteor is portentous, and some divine prognostick. Glanville.

Thick breath, quick pulse, and heaving of my heart,
All signs of some unwonted change appear. Dryden.

2. Unaccustomed; unused.

Philoclea, who blushing, and withal smiling, making shamefacedness pleasant, and pleasure shamefaced, tenderly moved her feet, unwonted to feel the naked ground. Sidney.

Sea calves unwonted to fresh waters fly. May.

O how oft shall he
On faith and changed gods complain; and seas
Rough with black winds and storms,
Unwonted shall admire. Milton, Tr. of Hor.

UNWO'NTEDNESS.* n. s. Uncommonness; what is not usual.

The chief thing that moved their passion and prejudice was but unwontedness and tradition. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 121.

UNWO'RMED.* adj. Not wormed. See To WORM.

She is mad with love,
As mad as ever unworm'd dog was. Beaum. and Fl. Wom. Pleased.

UNWO'RN.* part. adj. Not worn; not impaired.

So that six thousand years together, hath this great machine stood, always one and the same, unimpaired in its beauty, unworn in its parts, unwearied and undisturbed in its motions. Barrow, vol. ii. S. 6.

UNWO'RSHIPPED. adj. Not adored.

He resolv'd to leave

UNWO'RTHILY.† adv. [unpurðlice, Sax.] Not according to desert; either above or below merit.

I vow'd, base knight,
To tear the garter from thy craven leg,
Which I have done, because unworthily
Thou wast installed. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Fearing lest my jealous aim might err,
And so unworthily disgrace the man,
I gave him gentle looks. Shakspeare.

If we look upon the Odyssey as all a fiction, we consider it unworthily. It ought to be read as a story founded upon truth, adorned with embellishments of poetry. Broome.

UNWO'RTHINESS. n. s. Want of worth; want of merit.

A mind fearing the unworthiness of every word that should be presented to her ears, at length brought it forth in this manner. Sidney.

O let not an excellent spirit do itself such wrong, as to think where it is placed, embraced, and loved, there can be any unworthiness; since the weakest mist is not easilier driven away by the sun, than that is chased away with so high thoughts. Sidney.

Every night he comes with songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nothing steads us
To chide him from our eaves, for he persists. Shakspeare.

I fear'd to find you in another place;
But, since you're here, my jealousy grows less:
You will be kind to my unworthiness. Dryden.

Have a true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, which will not suffer you to rise to a confidence unwarrantably pretended to by some. Wake on Death.

UNWO'RTHY.† adj. [unpeoрðð, Sax.]

1. Not deserving: whether good or bad.

The Athanasian creed and doxology should remain in use; the one as a most divine explication of the chiefest articles of our Christian belief; the other as an heavenly acclamation of joyful applause to his praises, in whom we believe: neither the one nor the other unworthy to be heard sounding, as they are in the church of Christ. Hooker.

Every particular accident, not unworthy the remembrance, for brevity I wittingly pass over. Knowles.

2. Wanting merit.

Degree being vizarded,
Th' unworthiest shews as fairly in the mask. Shakspeare.

Are there unworthy men chosen to offices? Whitgift.

So may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that which one unworthier may attain;
And die with grieving. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

3. Mean; worthless; contemptible.

Tell me, Philoclea, did you ever see such a shepherd? did you ever hear of such a prince? and then tell me if a small or unworthy assault have conquered me? Sidney.

4. Not suitable; not adequate.

I laid at her feet a work, which was unworthy her, but which I hope she will forgive. Dryden.

Our friend's papers are in my hands, and I will take care to suppress things unworthy of him. Pope to Swift.

Care is taken to intersperse additions in such a manner, that scarce any book can be bought, without purchasing something unworthy of the author. Swift.

5. Unbecoming; vile.

The brutal action rous'd his manly mind:
Mov'd with unworthy usage of the maid,
He, though unarm'd, resolv'd to give her aid. Dryden.

UNWO'UND. part. pass. and pret. of unwind. Untwisted.

Thatchers tie with withs, but old pitch'd ropes unwound are more lasting. Mortimer, Husbandry.

UNWO'UNDED.† adj. [unpunbeb, Sax.]

1. Not wounded.

We may offend

2. Not hurt.

Oh! blest with temper:
She who can love a sister's charms, or hear
Sighs for a daughter with unwounded ear. Pope.

To UNWRA'P. v. a. To open what is folded.

To UNWRE'ATH. v. a. To untwine.

The beards of wild oats, and of divers other wild plants, continually wreath and unwreath themselves, according to the temperature of the ambient air. Boyle.

To UNYO'KE.† v. a. [unзeocian, unиucian, Sax.]

1. To loose from the yoke.

Our army is dispers'd already:
Like youthful steers unyok'd, they took their course
East, west, north, south. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Homer calls them like gods, and yet gives them the employment of slaves; they unyoke the mules. Broome.

2. To part; to disjoin.

Shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
So join'd in love, so strong in both,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regreet? Shakspeare.

UNYO'KED. adj.

1. Having never worn a yoke.

Seven bullocks yet unyok'd for Phœbus chuse,
And for Diana sev'n unspotted ewes. Dryden.

2. Licentious; unrestrained.

I will a-while uphold
The unyok'd humour of your idleness. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

UNZO'NED. adj. Not bound with a girdle.

Easy her motion seem'd, serene her air;
Full, though unzon'd, her bosom. Prior.

VO'CABLE.* n. s. [vocable, old Fr. Lat. vocabulum.] A word.

That one interpreteth somthynge obscurely in one place, the same translateth another (or els he himselfe) more manifestly by a more playne vocable of the same meaning in another place. Coverdale, Pref. to Bible.

We will next endeavour to understand that vocable, or term, tyrannus, that is, a tyrant or an evil king. Sir G. Buck, Rich. III. p. 133.

VOCA'BULARY. n. s. [vocabularium, Lat. vocabulaire, Fr.] A dictionary; a lexicon; a word book.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and that they stand in awe of conjurations, which signify nothing, not only in the dictionary of man, but in the subtiler vocabulary of Satan. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Among other books, we should be furnished with vocabularies and dictionaries of several sorts. Watts.

VO'CAL. adj. [vocal, Fr. vocalis, Lat.]

1. Having a voice.

Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues;
And there be words not made with lungs;
Sententious show'rs! O let them fall,
Their cadence is rhetorical. Crashaw.

Witness if I be silent, morn or even,
To hill, or valley, fountain, or fresh shade,
Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise. Milton, P. L.

Smooth-sliding Mincius, crown'd with vocal reeds,
That strain I heard was of a higher mood. Milton, Lycidas.

None can animate the lyre,
And the mute strings with vocal souls inspire,
As Helen, in whose eyes ten thousand Cupids dwell. Dryden.

Memnon, though stone, was counted vocal;
But 'twas the god, mean while, that spoke all.
Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing,
With prompting priest behind the hanging. Prior.

2. Uttered or modulated by the voice.

They which, under pretence of the law ceremonial being abrogated, require the abrogation of instrumental musick, approving nevertheless the use of vocal melody to remain, must shew some reason wherefore the one should be thought a legal ceremony, and not the other. Hooker.

They join'd their vocal worship to the choir

VOCA'LITY. n. s. [vocalitas, Lat. from vocal.] Power of utterance; quality of being utterable by the voice.

1. Flying; passing through the air.

The caterpillar towards the end of summer waxeth volatile, and turneth to a butterfly. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

There is no creature only volatile, or no flying animal but hath feet as well as wings; because there is not sufficient food for them always in the air. Ray on the Creation.

2. [volatile, Fr.] Having the power to pass off by spontaneous evaporation.

In vain, though by their powerful art they bind
Volatile Hermes. Milton, P. L.

When arsenick with soap gives a regulus, and with mercury sublimate a volatile fusible salt, like butter of antimony; doth not this shew that arsenick, which is a substance totally volatile, is compounded of fix'd and volatile parts, strongly cohering by a mutual attraction; so that the volatile will not ascend without carrying up the fixed? Newton.

3. Lively; fickle; changeable of mind; full of spirit; airy.

Active spirits, who are ever skimming over the surface of things with a volatile temper, will fix nothing in their mind. Watts on the Mind.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever, just the reverse of Mr. Pope, who hath always loved a domestick life. Swift.

VO'LATILE. n. s. [volatile, Fr.] A winged animal.

The air conveys the heat of the sun, maintains fires, and serves for the flight of volatiles. Brown, Vulg. Err.

VO'LATILENESS.† }
VOLATI'LITY. } n. s. [volatilité, Fr. from volatile.]

1. The quality of flying away by evaporation; not fixity.

Upon the compound body, chiefly observe the colour, fragility, or pliantness, the volatility or fixation, compared with simple bodies. Bacon.

Of volatility, the utmost degree is, when it will fly away without returning. Bacon.

Heat causeth the spirits to search some issue out of the body, as in the volatility of metals. Bacon.

The animal spirits cannot, by reason of their subtilty and volatileness, be discovered to the sense. Hale.

The volatility of mercury argues that they are not much bigger; nor may they be much less, lest they lose their opacity. Newton, Opt.

By the spirit of a plant, we understand that pure, elaborated oil, which, by reason of its extreme volatility, exhales spontaneously, in which the odour or smell consists. Arbuthnot.

2. Mutability of mind; airiness; liveliness.

Had we but the same delight in heavenly objects, did we but receive the truth in the love of it, and mingle it with faith in the hearing, this would fix that volatileness and flittiness of our memories, and make every truth as indelible as it is necessary. Bp. Hopkins, Expos. p. 314.

VOLATILIZA'TION. n. s. [from volatilize.] The act of making volatile.

Chemists have, by a variety of ways, attempted in vain the volatilization of the salt of tartar. Boyle.

To VO'LATILIZE. v. a. [volatiliser, Fr. from volatile.] To make volatile; to subtilize to the highest degree.

Spirit of wine has a refractive power, in a middle degree between those of water and oily substances, and accordingly seems to be composed of both, united by fermentation: the water, by means of some saline spirits with which it is impregnated, dissolving the oil, and volatilizing it by the action. Newton, Opt.

Spirituous liquors are so far from attenuating, volatilizing, and rendering perspirable the animal fluids, that it rather condenseth them. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

VOLCA'NO. n. s. [Italian, from Vulcan.] A burning mountain.

Navigators tell us there is a burning mountain in an island, and many volcanos and fiery hills. Brown.

When the Cyclops o'er their anvils sweat,
From the volcanos gross eruptions rise,
And curling sheets of smoke obscure the skies. Garth.

Subterraneous minerals ferment, and cause earthquakes, and cause furious eruptions of volcanos, and tumble down broken rocks. Bentley, Serm.

Why want we then encomiums on the storm,
Or famine, or volcanos? They perform
Their mighty deeds; they hero-like can slay,
And spread their ample deserts in a day. Young.

VOLE. n. s. [vole, Fr.] A deal at cards, that draws the whole tricks.

Past six, and not a living soul!
I might by this have won a vole. Swift.

VO'LERY. n. s. [volerie, Fr.] A flight of birds.

An old boy, at his first appearance, is sure to draw on him the eyes and chirping of the whole town volery; amongst which, there will not be wanting some birds of prey, that will presently be on the wing for him. Locke.

VOLITA'TION. n. s. [volito, Lat.] The act or power of flying.

Birds and flying animals are almost erect, advancing the head and breast in their progression, and only prone in the act of volitation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

VOLI'TION. n. s. [volitio, Lat.] The act of willing; the power of choice exerted.

To say that we cannot tell whether we have liberty, because we do not understand the manner of volition, is all one as to say, that we cannot tell whether we see or hear, because we do not understand the manner of sensation. Wilkins.

There is as much difference between the approbation of the judgment, and the actual volitions of the will, as between a man's viewing a desirable thing with his eye, and reaching after it with his hand. South, Serm.

Volition is the actual exercise of the power the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it; or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, by directing any particular action, or its forbearance. Locke.

VO'LITIVE. adj. Having the power to will.

They not only perfect the intellectual faculty, but the volitive; making the man not only more knowing, but more wise and better. Hale.

He had all the French assurance, cunning, and volubility of tongue. Addison.

She ran over the catalogue of diversions with such a volubility of tongue, as drew a gentle reprimand from her father. Female Quixote.

3. Mutability; liableness to revolution.

He that's a victor this moment, may be a slave the next: and this volubility of human affairs, is the judgment of providence, in the punishment of oppression. L'Estrange.

VO'LUBLE. adj. [volubilis, Latin.]

1. Formed so as to roll easily; formed so as to be easily put in motion.

Neither the weight of the matter of which a cylinder is made, nor its round voluble form, which, meeting with a precipice, do necessarily continue the motion of it, are any more imputable to that dead, choiceless creature in its first motion. Hammond.

The adventitious corpuscles may produce stability in the matter they pervade, by expelling thence those voluble particles, which, whilst they continued, did by their shape unfit for cohesion, or, by their motion, oppose coalition. Boyle.

2. Rolling; having quick motion.

This less voluble earth,
By shorter flight to the east, had left him there. Milton, P. L.

Then voluble, and bold; now hid, now seen,
Among thick-woven arborets. Milton, P. L.

3. Nimble; active. Applied to the tongue.

A friend promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices, which render it so wonderfully voluble and flippant. Addison.

These with a voluble and flippant tongue, become mere echos. Watts on the Mind.

4. Fluent of words. It is applied to the speech, or the speaker.

Cassio, a knave very voluble; no further conscionable, than in putting on the meer form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his loose affection. Shakspeare.

If voluble and sharp discourse be marr'd,
Unkindness blunts it more than marble hard. Shakspeare.

Vo'lubly.* adv. In a voluble manner.

This he as volubly would vent,
As if his stock would ne'er be spent. Hudibras.

VO'LUME. n. s. [volumen, Latin.]

1. Something rolled, or convolved.

2. As much as seems convolved at once; as a fold of a serpent, a wave of water.

Threescore and ten I can remember well;
Within the volume of which time I've seen
Hours dreadful, and things strange. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Unoppos'd they either lose their force,
Or wind in volumes to their former course. Dryden.

Behind the general mends his weary pace,
And silently to his revenge he sails:
So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,
And long behind his wounded volume trails. Dryden.

Thames' fruitful tides,
Slow through the vale in silver volumes play. Fenton.

By the insinuations of these crystals, the volumes of air are driven out of the watery particles, and many of them uniting, form larger volumes; which thereby have a greater force to expand themselves. Cheyne.

3. [volume, Fr.] A book; so called, because books were anciently rolled upon a staff.

Guyon all this while his book did read,
Ne yet has ended; for it was a great
And ample volume, that doth far exceed
My leisure, so long leaves here to repeat. Spenser.

Calmly, I do beseech you.——
Aye, as an hostler, that for the poorest piece
Will bear the knave by th' volume. Shakspeare.

The most sagacious man is not able to find out any blot or error in this great volume of the world. Wilkins.

I shall not now enlarge on the wrong judgments whereby men mislead themselves. This would make a volume. Locke.

If one short volume cou'd comprize
All that was witty, learn'd and wise:
How would it be esteem'd and read? Swift.

Volu'minous. adj. [from volume.]

1. Consisting of many complications.

The serpent roll'd voluminous and vast. Milton, P. L.

2. Consisting of many volumes, or books.

And gods beat up for volunteers
To Greece and Troy. Prior.

To VOLUNTEE'R. v. n. To go for a soldier. A cant word.

Leave off these wagers, for in conscience speaking,
The city needs not your new tricks for breaking:
And if you gallants lose, to all appearing,
You'll want an equipage for volunteering. Dryden.

VOLU'PTUARY. n. s. [voluptuaire, Fr. voluptuarius, Lat.] A man given up to pleasure and luxury.

Does not the voluptuary understand in all the liberties of a loose and a lewd conversation, that he runs the risk of body and soul? L'Estrange.

The parable was intended against the voluptuaries; men who liv'd like heathens, dissolutely, without regarding any of the restraints of religion. Atterbury.

VOLU'PTUOUS. adj. [voluptuosus, Latin; voluptueux, French.] Given to excess of pleasure; luxurious.

He them deceives; deceiv'd in his deceit;
Made drunk with drugs of dear voluptuous receipt. Spenser.

If a new sect have not two properties, it will not spread. The one is the supplanting, or the opposing of authority established; the other is the giving license to pleasures, and a voluptuous life. Bacon.

Thou wilt bring me soon
To that new world of light and bliss, among
The gods, who live at ease, where I shall reign
At thy right hand voluptuous, without end. Milton, P. L.

Then swoll'n with pride, into the snare I fell
Of fair fallacious looks; venereal trains,
Soft'ned with pleasure, and voluptuous life. Milton, S. A.

Speculative atheism subsists only in our speculation; whereas really human nature cannot be guilty of the crime. Indeed a few sensual and voluptuous persons may for a season eclipse this native light of the soul, but can never wholly smother and extinguish it. Bentley, Serm.

VOLU'PTUOUSLY. adv. [from voluptuous.] Luxuriously; with indulgence of excessive pleasure.

Had I a dozen sons, I had rather eleven died nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shakspeare.

This cannot be done, if my will be so worldly or voluptuously disposed, as never to suffer me to think of them; but perpetually to carry away, and apply my mind to other things. South.

VOLU'PTUOUSNESS. n. s. [from voluptuous.] Luxuriousness; addictedness to excess of pleasure.

There's no bottom
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

If he fill'd his vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones
Call on him for't. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Here where still evening is, not noon nor night;
Where no voluptuousness, yet all delight. Donne.

These sons of Epicurus, for voluptuousness and irreligion, must pass for the only wits of the age. South.

You may be free, unless
Your other lord forbids voluptuousness. Dryden.

VOLUTA'TION.† n. s. [volutatio, Latin.] Wallowing; rolling.

In the sea, when the storm is over, there remains still an inward working and volutation.
Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 21.

VO'LUTE. n. s. [volute, Fr.] A member of a column. That part of the capitals of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders, which is supposed to represent the bark of trees twisted and turned into spiral lines, or, according to others, the head-dresses of virgins in their long hair. According to Vitruvius, those that appear above the stems in the Corinthian order, are sixteen in every capital, four in the Ionick, and eight in the Composite. These volutes are more especially remarkable in the Ionick capital, representing a pillow or cushion laid between the abacus and echinus: whence that antient architect calls the voluta pulvinus. Harris.

It is said there is an Ionick pillar in the Santa Maria Transtevere, where the marks of the compass are still to be seen on the volute; and that Palladio learnt from thence the working of that difficult problem. Addison.

VO'MICA. n. s. [Latin.] An encysted tumour in the lungs.

If the ulcer is not broke, it is commonly called a vomica, attended with the same symptoms as an empyema; because the vomica communicating with the vessels of the lungs, must necessarily void some of the putrid matter, and taint the blood. Arbuthnot on Diet.

VO'MICK NUT. n. s. The nucleus of a fruit of an East-Indian tree, the wood of which is the lignum colubrinum, or snakewood of the shops. It is flat, compressed, and round, of the breadth of a shilling, and about the thickness of a crown-piece. It is certain poison to quadrupeds and birds; and taken internally, in small doses, it disturbs the whole human frame, and brings on convulsions. Hill, Mat. Medica.

To VO'MIT. v. n. [vomo, Latin.] To cast up the contents of the stomach.

The dog, when he is sick at the stomach, knows his cure, falls to his grass, vomits, and is well. More.

To VO'MIT. v. a. [vomir, Fr.]

1. To throw up from the stomach: often with up or out.

As though some world unknown,
By pamper'd nature's store too prodigally fed,
And surfeiting therewith, her surcrease vomited. Drayton.

The fish vomited out Jonah upon the dry land. Jonah, ii.

Vomiting is of use, when the foulness of the stomach requires it. Wiseman, Surgery.

Weak stomachs vomit up the wine that they drink in too great quantities, in the form of vinegar. Arbuthnot.

2. To throw up with violence from any hollow.

VO'MIT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The matter thrown up from the stomach.

He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd,
Like vomit from his yawning entrails pour'd. Sandys.

2. An emetick medicine; a medicine that causes vomit.

This vomit may be repeated often, if it be found successful. Blackmore.

Whether a vomit may be safely given, must be judged by the circumstances; if there be any symptoms of an inflammation of the stomach, a vomit is extremely dangerous. Arbuthnot.

VOMI'TION. n. s. [from vomo, Lat.] The act or power of vomiting.

How many have saved their lives, by spewing up their debauch? Whereas, if the stomach had wanted the faculty of vomition, they had inevitably died. Grew. Cosmol.

VO'MITIVE. adj. [vomitif, Fr.] Emetick; causing vomits.

From this vitriolous quality, mercurius dulcis, and vitriol vomitive, occasion black ejections. Brown, Vulg. Err.

VO'MITORY. adj. [vomitoire, Fr. vomitorius, Lat.] Procuring vomits; emetick.

Since regulus of stibium, or glass of antimony, will communicate to water or wine a purging or vomitory operation, yet the body itself, after iterated infusions, abates not virtue or weight. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Some have vomited up such bodies as these, namely, thick, short, blunt pins, which, by straining, they vomit up again, or by taking vomitories privately. Harvey on Consumptions.

VORA'CIOUS. adj. [vorace, Fr. vorax, Lat.]

1. Greedy to eat; ravenous; edacious.

So voracious is this humour grown, that it draws in every thing to feed it. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. Rapacious; greedy.

VORA'CIOUSLY.† adv. [from voracious.] Greedily; ravenously.

He [Dr. Johnson] was voraciously fond of good eating. Boswell, Tour to the Hebr. p. 11.

VORA'CIOUSNESS.† } n. s. [voracité, Fr. voracitas, Lat.
VORA'CITY. } from voracious.] Greediness; ravine; ravenousness.

He is as well contented with this, as those that with the rarities of the earth pamper their voracities. Sandys.

Creatures by their voracity pernicious, have commonly fewer young. Derham, Physico, Theol.

Distinguishing himself by voraciousness of appetite. Tatler, No. 255.

VORA'GINOUS.* adj. [voraginosus, Lat.] Full of gulfs. Scott.

VO'RTEX. n. s. In the plural vortices. [Latin.] Any thing whirled round.

If many contiguous vortices of molten pitch were each of them as large as those which some suppose to revolve about the sun and fix'd stars; yet these, and all their parts would, by their tenacity and stiffness, communicate their motion to one another. Newton, Opt.

Nothing else could impel it, unless the etherial matter be supposed to be carried about the sun, like a vortex, or whirlpool, as a vehicle to convey it and the rest of the planets. Bentley, Serm.

The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng;
Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less,
Roll in her vortex, and her power confess. Pope.

VO'RTICAL. adj. [from vortex.] Having a whirling motion.

If three equal round vessels be filled, the one with cold water, the other with oil, the third with molten pitch, and the liquors be stirred about alike, to give them a vortical motion; the pitch, by its tenacity, will lose its motion quickly; the oil, being less tenacious, will keep it longer; and the water, being still less tenacious, will keep it longest, but yet will lose it in a short time. Newton, Opt.

It is not a magnetical power, nor the effect of a vortical motion; those common attempts towards the explication of gravity. Bentley, Serm.

VO'TARESS. n. s. [female of votary.] A woman devoted to any worship or state.

The imperial votaress passed on,
In maiden meditation, fancy free. Shakspeare.

His mother was a votaress of my order;
And, in the spiced Indian air by night,
Full often she hath gossip'd by my side. Shakspeare.

No rosary this votaress needs,
Her very syllables are beads. Cleaveland.

Thy votaress from my tender years I am;
And love, like thee, the woods and sylvan game. Dryden.

What force have pious vows? the queen of love
His sister sends, her votaress from above. Pope.

VO'TARIST. n. s. [devotus, Latin.] One devoted to any person or thing; one given up by a vow to any service or worship; votary.

I wish a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of St. Clare. Shakspeare.

Earth, yield me roots! What is here?
Gold! yellow, glittering, precious gold!
No, gods, I am no idle votarist. Shakspeare.

The gray-hooded Even,
Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed,
Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain. Milton, Comus.

VO'TARY. n. s. One devoted, as by a vow, to any particular service; worship, study, or state of life.

Wherefore waste I time to counsel thee?
Thou art a votary to fond desire. Shakspeare.

Thou, faint god of sleep! forget that I
Was ever known to be thy votary.
No more my pillow shall thine altar be,
Nor will I offer any more to thee,
Myself a melting sacrifice. Crashaw.

'Twas the coldness of the votary, and not the prayer, that was in fault, whenever fervor was deficient at the publick office of the church. Fell.

By these means, men worship the idols which have been set up in their minds; and, stamping the characters of divinity upon absurdities and errors, become zealous votaries to bulls and monkies. Locke.

How can heav'nly wisdom prove
An instrument to earthly love?
Know'st thou not yet, that men commence
Thy votaries for want of sense. Swift.

The enemy of our happiness has his servants and votaries, among those who are called by the name of the Son of God. Rogers, Serm.

VO'TARY. adj. Consequent to a vow.

Superstition is now so well advanced, that men of the first blood are as firm as butchers by occupation; and votary resolution is made equipollent to custom, even in matter of blood. Bacon.

VOTE.† n. s. [votum, Lat.]

1. Suffrage; voice given and numbered.

He that joins instruction with delight,
Profit with pleasure, carries all the votes. Roscommon.

How many have no other ground for their tenets, than the supposed honesty or learning of those of the same profession? as if truth were to be established by the vote of the multitude. Locke.

The final determination arises from the majority of opinions or votes in the assembly, because they ought to be sway'd by the superior weight of reason. Watts.

2. United voice of persons in publick prayer. See the second sense of SUFFRAGE. Not now in use.

And here may be taken in those interchangeable votes of priest and people, which are interposed, "O Lord, arise, help us, and deliver us for thy Name's sake! O God, we have heard with our ears," &c. and therefore now, "Arise, O Lord, help us, and deliver us for thine honour." Bp. Prideaux, Euch. p. 226.

To VOTE. v. a.

1. To choose by suffrage; to determine by suffrage.

You are not only in the eye and ear of your master; but you are also a favourite, the favourite of the time, and so are in his bosom also; the world hath also voted you, and doth so esteem of you. Bacon.

2. To give by vote.

The parliament voted them one hundred thousand pounds by way of recompence for their sufferings. Swift.

VO'TER. n. s. [from vote.] One who has the right of giving his voice or suffrage.

Elections growing chargeable, the voters, that is, the bulk of the common people, have been universally seduced into bribery, perjury, drunkenness, malice, and slander. Swift.

He hates an action base;
Can sometimes drop a voter's claim,
And give up party to his fame. Swift.

VO'TIVE.† adj. [votivus, Latin.] Given by vow; observed in consequence of a vow.

Votive abstinence some constitutions may endure. Feltham, Res. i. 85.

Such in Isis' temple you may find,
On votive tablets to the life pourtray'd. Dryden.

Venus! take my votive glass;
Since I am not what I was,
What from this day I shall be,
Venus! let me never see. Prior.

To VOUCH.† v. a. [voucher, Norman French.]

1. To call to witness; to obtest.

Some vouch great names, because they think they deserve; but I, because I need such. South, Serm. Ded. to Ld. Clarendon.

The sun and day are witnesses for me;
Let him who fights unseen relate his own,
And vouch the silent stars and conscious moon. Dryden.

2. To attest; to warrant; to declare; to maintain by repeated affirmations.

You do not give the cheer; the feast is sold
That is not often vouched, while 'tis making
'Tis given with welcome. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The consistency of the discourse, and the pertinency of it to the design he is upon, vouches it worthy of our great apostle. Locke.

They made him ashamed to vouch the truth of the relation, and afterwards to credit it. Atterbury.

To VOUCH. v. n. To bear witness; to appear as a witness; to give testimony.

He declares he will not believe her, until the elector of Hanover shall vouch for the truth of what she hath so solemnly affirmed. Swift.

VOUCH. n. s. [from the verb.] Warrant; attestation.

What praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed? one that, in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself? Shakspeare, Othello.

VO'UCHER. n. s. [from vouch.]

1. One who gives witness to any thing.

All the great writers of that age stand up together as vouchers for one another's reputation. Spectator.

I have added nothing to the malice or absurdity of them, which it behoves me to declare, since the vouchers themselves will be so soon lost. Pope.

2. Testimony.

Better to starve,
Than crave the hire which first we do deserve:
Why in this wolvish gown should I stand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear,
Their needless voucher? Shakspeare, Coriol.

The stamp is a mark, and a public voucher, that a piece of such denomination is of such a weight, and of such a fineness, i. e. has so much silver in it. Locke.

To VOUCHSA'FE. v. a. [vouch and safe.]

1. To permit any thing to be done without danger.

2. To condescend to grant.

He grew content to mark their speeches, and marvel at such wit in shepherds, after to like their company, and lastly to vouchsafe conference. Sidney.

Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two? ——
—Two thousand, fair woman, and I'll Vouchsafe thee hearing. Shakspeare.

But if the sense of touch seem such delight
Beyond all other, think the same vouchsaf'd
To cattle and each beast. Milton, P. L.

It is not said by the apostle, that God vouchsafed to the heathens the means of salvation; and yet I will not affirm that God will save none of those, to whom the sound of the gospel never reached. South, Serm.

To VOUCHSA'FE. v. n. To deign; to condescend; to yield.

Do I not see Zelmane, who does not think a thought which is not first weigh'd by wisdom and virtue? doth not she vouchsafe to love me with like ardour? Sidney.

Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,
Of these supposed crimes to give me leave
By circumstance but to acquit myself. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Vouchsafe, illustrious Ormond, to behold
What pow'r the charms of beauty had of old. Dryden.

VOUCHSA'FEMENT. n. s. [from vouchsafe.] Grant; condescension.

The infinite superiority of God's nature, places a vast disparity betwixt his greatest communicated vouchsafements, and his boundless, and therefore to his creatures incommunicable perfections. Boyle.

VOW. n. s. [vœu, Fr. votum, Lat.]

1. Any promise made to a divine power; an act of devotion, by which some part of life, or some part of possessions is consecrated to a particular purpose.

The gods are deaf to hot or peevish vows;
They are polluted offerings. Shakspeare.

Where honour or where conscience does not bind,
No other law shall shackle me,
Slave to myself I will not be,
Nor shall my future actions be confin'd
By my own present mind.
Who by resolves or vows engag'd does stand
For days that yet belong to fate,
Does, like an unthrift, mortgage his estate
Before it comes into his hand.
The bondman of the cloister so,
All that he does receive does always owe,
And still as time comes in it goes away,
Not to enjoy, but debts to pay.
Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Which his hours' work, as well as hours, does tell,
Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

If you take that vow and that wish to be all one, you are mistaken; a wish is a far lower degree than a vow. Hammond.

She vows for his return with vain devotion pays. Dryden.

2. A solemn promise, commonly used for a promise of love or matrimony.

By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever woman spoke. Shakspeare.

Those who wear the woodbine on their brow,
Were knights of love, who never broke their vow;
Firm to their plighted faith. Dryden.

To VOW. v. a. [vouer, Fr. voveo, Lat.]

1. To consecrate by a solemn dedication; to give to a divine power.

David often voweth unto God the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving in the congregation. Hooker.

Vow and pay unto the Lord. Ps. lxxvi.

When we have not only vowed, but delivered them over into the possession of Almighty God, for the maintenance of his publick worship, and the ministers thereof, they are not now arbitrable, nor to be revoked. Spelman.

Whoever sees these irreligious men,
With burden of a sickness, weak and faint,
But hears them talking of religion then,
And vowing of their soul to ev'ry saint. Davies.

This plant Latinus, when his town he wall'd,
Then found, and from the tree Laurentum call'd:
And last, in honour of his new abode,
He vow'd the laurel to the laurel's god. Dryden.

2. To devote: a ceremonial phrase.

To Master Harvey, upon some special consideration, I have vowed this my labour. Spenser.

To VOW. v. n. To make vows or solemn promises.

Dost see how unregarded now
That piece of beauty passes?
There was a time, when I did vow
To that alone; but mark the fate of faces. Suckling.

VO'WED.† part. pass. [from the verb.] Consecrated by solemn declaration.

Me in my vow'd
Picture the sacred wall declares t' have hung
My dank and dropping weeds
To the stern god of sea. Milton, Tr. of Horace.

VO'WEL n. s. [voyelle, Fr. vocalis, Lat.] A letter which can be uttered by itself.

I distinguish letters into vowels and consonants, yet not wholly upon their reason, that a vowel may be sounded alone, a consonant not without a vowel; which will not be found all true; for many of the consonants may be sounded alone, and some joined together without a vowel, as bl, st, and as we pronounce the latter syllable of people, riffle. Holder.

Virgil makes the two vowels meet without an elision. Broome.

Vo'welled.* adj. Furnished with vowels.

But Italy, reviving from the trance
Of Vandal, Goth, and monkish ignorance,
With pauses, cadence, and well vowell'd words,
And all the graces a good ear affords,
Made rhyme an art. Dryden to Ld. Roscommon.

Vo'wer.* n. s. One who makes a vow.

I think it needful that the vower should be well convinced of the greatness of his sin, in making such a [rash] vow. Sanderson, Cases of Consc. p. 115.

Vowfe'llow. n. s. [vow and fellow.] One bound by the same vow.

Who are the votaries,
That are vowfellows with this virtuous king? Shakspeare.

VO'YAGE.† n. s. [voyage, Fr. from viam agere, Lat. The old Engl. word is viage. Huloet's Dict.]

1. A travel by sea or land, formerly; now applied only to that by sea.

Guyon forward gan his voyage make,
With his black palmer, that him guided still. Spenser.

He went forth and all his power to go before king Nabuchodonosor in the voyage, and to cover all the face of the earth. Judith, ii. 19.

Our ships went sundry voyages, as well to the pillars of Hercules, as to other parts in the Atlantick and Mediterranean seas. Bacon.

This great man acted like an able pilot in a long voyage; contented to sit in the cabin when the winds were allay'd, but ready to resume the helm when the storm arose. Prior.

2. Course; attempt; undertaking. A low phrase.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I wou'd turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakspeare.

If you make your voyage upon her, and prevail, I am no further your enemy. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

3. The practice of travelling.

All nations have interknowledge of one another, by voyage into foreign parts, or strangers that come to them. Bacon.

To Vo'yage.† v. n. [voyager, Fr. from the noun.] To travel; now appropriated to travelling by sea.

My life hath not been unexpensive in learning and voyaging about. Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

For voyaging to learn the direful art,
To taint with deadly drugs the barbed dart;
Has refus'd t' impart the baneful trust. Pope, Odyss.

To Vo'yage. v. a. To travel; to pass over.

I with pain
Voyag'd the unreal, vast, unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton, P. L.

Vo'yager. n. s. [voyageur, Fr. from voyage.] One who travels by sea.

Disdain not in thy constant travelling
To do as other voyagers, and make
Some turns into less creeks, and wisely take
Fresh water at the Heliconian spring. Donne.

How comfortable this is, voyagers can best tell. Cheyne.

Deny your vessels, ye deny in vain;
A private voyager I pass the main. Pope, Odyss.

UP. adv. [up, Saxon; op, Dutch and Danish.]

1. Aloft; on high; not down.

From those two brethren, admire the wonderful changes of worldly things, now up, now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play. Knolles.

Thither his course he bends; but up or down,
By center, or eccentrick, hard to tell,
Or longitude. Milton, P. L.

2. Out of bed; in the state of being risen from rest.

Helen was not up? was she? Shakspeare.

His chamber being commonly stived with suiters, when he was up, he gave his legs, arms, and breast to his servants to dress him, his eyes to his letters, and ears to petitioners. Wotton.

3. In the state of being risen from a seat.

Upon his first rising, a general whisper ran among the country people, that Sir Roger was up. Addison.

4. From a state of decumbiture or concealment.

5. In a state of being built.

Up with my tent; here will I lie to-night;
But where to-morrow?—well, all's one for that. Shakspeare.

6. Above the horizon.

As soon as the sun is up, set upon the city. Judges, ix.

Now morn with rosy light had streak'd the sky,
Up rose the sun, and up rose Emily;
Address'd her early steps to Cynthia's fane. Dryden.

7. To a state of proficiency.

Till we have wrought ourselves up into this degree of Christian indifference, we are in bondage. Atterbury.

8. In a state of exaltation.

Those that were up themselves, kept others low;
Those that were low themselves held others hard,
Ne suffered them to rise, or greater grow. Spenser.

Henry the Fifth is crown'd; up vanity!
Down royal state! all you sage counsellors hence. Shakspeare.

9. In a state of climbing.

Straight the rumor flew
Up to the city; which heard, up they drew
By daies first breake. Chapman.

10. In a state of insurrection.

The gentle archbishop of York is up
With well appointed powers. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Rebels there are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword. Shakspeare.

Thou hast fir'd me; my soul's up in arms,
And mans each part about me. Dryden.

11. In a state of being increased or raised.

Grief and passion are like floods raised in little brooks by a sudden rain; they are quickly up, and if the concernment be pour'd unexpectedly in upon us, it overflows us. Dryden.

12. From a remoter place, coming to any person or place.

As a boar was whetting his teeth, up comes a fox to him. L'Estrange.

13. Into order: as, he drew up his regiment.

14. From younger to elder years.

I am ready to die from my youth up. Ps. lxxxviii.

15. Up and down. Dispersedly; here and there.

Abundance of them are seen scattered up and down like so many little islands when the tide is low. Addison.

16. Up and down. Backward and forward.

Our desire is, in this present controversy, not to be carried up and down with the waves of uncertain arguments, but rather positively to lead on the minds of the simpler sort by plain and easy degrees, till the very nature of the thing itself do make manifest what is truth. Hooker.

The skipping king he rambled up and down,
With shallow jesters. Shakspeare.

Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again;
Then nimbly shifts a thrust, then lends a wound;
Now back he gives, then rushes on amain. Daniel.

Thou and death
Shall dwell at ease, and up and down unseen
Wing silently the buxom air. Milton, P. L.

On this windy sea of land, the fiend
Walk'd up and down alone, bent on his prey. Milton, P. L.

What a miserable life dost thou lead, says a dog to a lion, to run starving up and down thus in woods. L'Estrange.

She moves! life wanders up and down
Through all her face, and lights up every charm. Addison.

17. Up to. To an equal height with.

Tantalus was punished with the rage of an eternal thirst, and set up to the chin in water, that fled from his lips whenever he attempted to drink it. Addison.

18. Up to. Adequately to.

The wisest men in all ages have lived up to the religion of their country, when they saw nothing in it opposite to morality. Addison.

They are determined to live up to the holy rule, by which they have obliged themselves to walk. Atterbury.

We must not only mortify all these passions that solicit us, but we must learn to do well, and act up to the positive precepts of our duty. Rogers, Serm.

19. Up with. A phrase that signifies the act of raising any thing to give a blow.

She, quick and proud, and who did Pas despise,
Up with her fist, and took him on the face;
Another time, quoth she, become more wise:
Thus Pas did kiss her hand with little grace. Sidney.

20. It is added to verbs, implying some accumulation, or increase.

If we could number up those prodigious swarms that settled in every part of the Campania of old Rome, they would amount to more than can be found in any six parts of Europe of the same extent. Addison on Italy.

Up. interject.

1. A word exhorting to rise from bed.

Up, up! cries gluttony, 'tis break of day;
Go drive the deer, and drag the finny prey. Pope.

2. A word of exhortation, exciting or rousing to action.

Up then, Melpomene, the mournful muse of nine;
Such cause of mourning never hadst afore.
Up, grisly ghosts; and up my rueful rime;
Matter of mirth now shalt thou have no more. Spenser.

But up, and enter now into full bliss. Milton, P. L.

Up, up, for honour's sake; twelve legions wait you,
And long to call you chief. Dryden.

Up. prep. From a lower to a higher part; not down.

In going up a hill, the knees will be most weary; in going down, the thighs: for that in lifting the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body beareth most upon the knees, and in going down, upon the thighs. Bacon.

To Upbe'ar. v. a. preter. upbore; part. pass. upborn. [up and bear.]

1. To sustain aloft; to support in elevation.

Rang'd in a line the ready racers stand,
Start from the goal, and vanish o'er the strand:
Swift as on wings of wind, upborn they fly,
And drifts of rising dust involve the sky. Pope.

2. To raise aloft.

This with pray'r,
Or one short sigh of human breath, upborn,
Ev'n to the seat of God. Milton, P. L.

A monstrous wave upbore
The chief, and dash'd him on the craggy shore. Pope.

3. To support from falling.

Vital powers gan wax both weak and wan,
For want of food and sleep; which two upbear,
Like weighty pillars, this frail life of man. Spenser.

To Upbi'nd.* v. a. [up and bind.] To bind up.

O Peace, thy injur'd robes upbind! Collins, Ode to Peace.

To Upblo'w.* v. a. [up and blow.] To blow up; to make tumid.

His belly was upblowne with luxury. Spenser, F. Q.

To UPBRA'ID. v. a. [upȝebꞃæban, upȝebꞃeban, Saxon.]

1. To charge contemptuously with any thing disgraceful. It has commonly with, sometimes of, before the thing imputed; sometimes it has only an accusative of the thing, as in Milton, and sometimes the person without the thing, or the thing without the person.

The fathers, when they were upbraided with that defect, comforted themselves with the meditation of God's most gracious nature, who did not therefore the less accept of their hearty affection. Hooker.

It seem'd in me
But as an honour snatch'd with boist'rous hand,
And I had many living to upbraid
My gain of it by their assistances,
Which daily grew to quarrel. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

If you refuse your aid, yet do not
Upbraid us with our distress. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Vain man! how long wilt thou thy God upbraid?
And, like the roaring of a furious wind,
Thus vent the vile distemper of thy mind? Sandys.

How cunningly the sorceress displays
Her own transgressions, to upbraid me mine. Milton, S. A.

'Tis a general complaint against you, and I must upbraid you with it, that because you need not write, you will not. Dryden.

You may the world of more defects upbraid,
That other works by nature are unmade;
That she did never at her own expence
A palace rear. Blackmore.

2. To object as matter of reproach: with to before the person.

Those that have been bred together, are more apt to envy their equals when raised: for it doth upbraid unto them their own fortunes, and pointeth at them. Bacon.

Any of these, without regarding the pains of churchmen, grudge or upbraid to them those small remains of antient piety, which the rapacity of some ages has scarce left. Sprat.

May they not justly to our climes upbraid,
Shortness of night, and penury of shade. Prior.

3. To urge with reproach.

I have too long born
Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffs. Shakspeare.

He that knowingly commits an ill, has the upbraidings of his own conscience. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

4. To reproach on account of a benefit received from the reproacher.

Every hour
He flashes into one gross crime or other;
His knights grow riotous, and he himself upbraids us
On every trifle. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

If any lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth liberally, and upbraideth not. James, i. 5.

Be ashamed of upbraiding speeches before friends: and after thou hast given upbraid not. Ecclus. xli. 22.

5. To bring reproach upon; to shew faults by being in a state of comparison.

Ah, my son, how evil fits it me to have such a son, and how much doth thy kindness upbraid my wickedness! Sidney.

The counsel which I cannot take,
Instead of healing, but upbraids my weakness. Addison.

6. To treat with contempt. Not in use.

There also was that mighty monarch laid,
Low under all, yet above all in pride;
That name of native sire did foul upbraid,
And would, as Ammon's son, be magnify'd. Spenser.

Upbra'ider.† n. s. [from upbraid.] One that reproaches.

The latter hath no upbraiders. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Upbra'iding.* n. s. [from upbraid.] Reproach.

Thou say'st his meat was sauc'd with thy upbraidings. Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

Upbra'idingly. adv. By way of reproach.

The time was when men would learn and study good things, not envy those that had them. Then men were had in price for learning; now letters only make men vile. He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nickname. B. Jonson.

To Upbra'y. v. a. [A word formed from upbraid by Spenser, for the sake of a rhyming termination.] To shame.

Vile knight,
That knights and knighthood dost with shame upbray,
And shew'st th' ensample of thy childish might,
With silly, weak, old women thus to fight. Spenser.

Upbro'ught. part. pass. of upbring. Educated; nurtured.

Divinely wrought,
And of the brood of angels, heav'nly born,
And with the crew of blessed saints upbrought,
Each of which did her with her gifts adorn. Spenser.

U'pcast. [Participle from To cast up. The verb To upcast is not in use.] Thrown upwards.

Beasts with upcast eyes forsake their shade,
And gaze, as if I were to be obey'd. Dryden.
Old Saturn, here with upcast eyes,
Beheld his abdicated skies. Addison.

U'pcast. n. s. A term of bowling; a throw; a cast.

Was there ever man had such luck? when I kiss'd the jack, upon an upcast to be hit away! Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

To Updra'w. v. a. [up and draw.] To draw up.

From her side the fatal key,
Sad instrument of all our woe, she took,
And, tow'rds the gate rolling her bestial train,
Forthwith the huge portcullis high updrew. Milton, P. L.
Which, through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst updrawn,
Rose a fresh fountain. Milton, P. L.

To Upga'ther. v. a. [up and gather.] To contract.

Himself he close upgather'd more and more
Into his den, that his deceitful train,
By his there being might not be bewraid,
Ne any noise, ne any question made. Spenser.

To Upgro'w. v. n. [up and grow.] To grow up.

Over head up-grew
Insuperable highth of loftiest shade. Milton, P. L.
This man born, and now up-grown,
To shew him worthy of his birth divine
And high prediction, henceforth I expose
To Satan. Milton, P. R.

Upha'nd. adj. [up and hand.] Lifted by the hand.

The uphand sledge is used by underworkmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter. They use it with both their hands before them, and seldom lift their hammer higher than their head. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

To Uphe'ave. v. a. [up and heave.] To heave up; to lift up.

Sorrow in far more woeful wise
Took on with plaint, upheaving to the skies
Her wretched hands. Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.
Immediately the mountains huge appear
Emergent, and their broad bare backs upheave
Into the clouds. Milton, P. L.
Scarce from his mold
Behemoth (biggest born of earth) upheav'd
His vastness. Milton, P. L.

Uphe'ld. pret. and part. pass. of uphold. Maintained; sustained.

He who reigns
Monarch in heaven, till then, as one secure,
Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute. Milton, P. L.

Uphi'll. adj. [up and hill.] Difficult; like the labour of climbing a hill.

What an uphill labour must it be to a learner, who has those first rudiments to master at twenty years of age, which others are taught at ten. Richardson, Clarissa.
Yet, as immortal, in our uphill chace
We press coy fortune with unslacken'd pace. Young.

To Uphoa'rd. v. a. [up and hoard.] To treasure; to store; to accumulate in private places.

Heaps of huge words uphoarded hideously
With horrid sound, though having little sense,
They think to be chief praise of poetry;
And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have marr'd the face of goodly poesie,
And made a monster of their fantasie. Spenser.
If thou hast uphoarded in thy life
Extorted treasure, in the womb of earth,
Speak of it. Shakspeare.

To UPHO'LD. v. a. preter. upheld; and part. pass. upheld, and upholden. [up and hold.]

1. To lift on high.

The mournful train with groans and hands upheld,
Besought his pity. Dryden.

2. To support; to sustain; to keep from falling.

While life upholds this arm,
This arm upholds the house of Lancaster. Shakspeare.

This great man found no means to continue and uphold his ill-purchased greatness, but by rejecting the English law, and assuming, in lieu thereof, the barbarous customs of the Irish. Davies on Ireland.

Poetry and painting were upheld by the strength of imagination. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

3. To keep from declension.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation, where causes are fair pleaded; for that upholds, in the client the reputation of his council, and beats down in him the conceit of his cause. Bacon.

Never was a time, when the interposition of the magistrate was more necessary, to secure the honour of religion, and uphold the authority of those great principles, by which his own authority is best upheld. Atterbury.

4. To support in any state of life.

Many younger brothers have neither lands nor means to uphold themselves. Ralegh.

5. To continue; to keep from defeat.

Divers, although peradventure not willing to be yoked with elderships, yet were contented to uphold opposition against bishops, not without greater hurt to the course of their whole proceedings. Hooker.

6. To keep from being lost.

Faulconbridge,
In spite of spite, alone upholds the day. Shakspeare.

7. To continue without failing.

A deaf person, by observing the motions of another man's mouth, knows what he says, and upholds a current communication of discourse with him. Holder.

8. To continue in being.

As Nebuchodnosor liveth, who hath sent thee for the upholding of every living thing. Judith, xi. 7.

A due proportion is held betwixt the parts, as well in the natural body of man, as the body politick of the state, for the upholding of the whole. Hakewill.

Upho'lder. n. s. [from uphold.]

1. A supporter.

Suppose then Atlas ne'er so wise:
Yet when the weight of kingdoms lies
Too long upon his single shoulders,
Sink down he must, or find upholders. Swift.

2. A sustainer in being.

The knowledge thereof is so many manuductions to the knowledge and admiration of the infinite wisdom of the Creator and upholder of them. Hale.

3. An undertaker; one who provides for funerals.

The company of upholders have a right upon the bodies of the subjects. Arbuthnot.

Where the brass knocker wrapt in flannel band,
Forbids the thunder of the footman's hand;
The upholder, rueful harbinger of death,
Waits with impatience for the dying breath. Gay.

Upho'lsterer. n. s. [a corruption of upholder.] One who furnishes houses; one who fits up apartments with beds and furniture.

If a corner of the hanging wants a single nail, send for the upholsterer. Swift.
Mere wax as yet, you fashion him with ease,
Your barber, cook, upholsterer. Pope.

Upho'lstery.* n. s. The articles made or sold by upholsterers.

U'PLAND.† n. s. [uplanð, Sax.] Higher ground.

U'PLAND. adj.

1. Higher in situation.

Those in Cornwall do no more by nature, than others elsewhere by choice, conceive themselves an estranged society from the upland dwellers, and carry an emulation against them. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Sometimes with secure delight,
The upland hamlets will invite. Milton, L'All.

2. Rude; savage. This is the meaning in Chapman; probably because the uplanders, having less commerce, were less civilized.

And long'd to see this heap of fortitude,
That so illiterate was, and upland rude,
That lawes divine nor humane he had learn'd. Chapman.

UPLA'NDISH.† adj. [uplandiſc, Sax.]

1. Higher in situation; mountainous.

He caused fifteen miles' space of uplandish ground, where the sea had no passage, to be cut and digged up. Robinson, Tr. of More's Utopia, B. 2. ch. 1.

2. Inhabiting mountains; rustical; rude.

Lion-like, uplandish, and mere wild,
Slave to his pride; and all his nerves being naturally compil'd
Of eminent strength; stalks out and preys upon a silly sheep. Chapman, Il.

Some are more domestical and tame; and others again, are altogether wild, uplandish, and agrestial. Swan, Spec. Mundi, ch. 8. § 2.

To UPLA'Y. v. a. [up and lay.] To hoard; to lay up.

We are but farmers of ourselves; yet may,
If we can stock ourselves and thrive, uplay
Much, much good treasure for the great rent-day. Donne.

To UPLE'AD. v. a. [up and lead.] To lead upward.

Upled by thee
Into the heaven of heavens I have presum'd,
An earthly guest. Milton, P. L.

To UPLI'FT. v. a. [up and lift.] To raise aloft.

Mechanick slaves,
With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

With head uplift above the wave, and eyes
That sparkling blaz'd. Milton, P. L.

When by just vengeance guilty mortals perish,
The gods behold their punishment with pleasure,
And lay th' uplifted thunderbolt aside. Addison, Cato.

Songs, sonnets, epigrams, the winds uplift,
And whisk them back to Evans, Young, and Swift. Pope.

To UPLO'CK. v. a. [up and lock.] To lock up.

So am I as the rich, whose blessed key
Can bring him to his sweet uplocked treasure. Shakspeare, Sonn. 52.

U'PMOST. adj. [an irregular superlative formed from up.] Highest; topmost.

Away! ye skum,
That still rise upmost when the nation boils;
That have but just enough of sense to know
The master's voice, when rated to depart. Dryden.

UPO'N.† prep. [up and on. The Sax. upa, upon, signifies above, and M. Goth. ufar, higher: it is very probable, as Mr. Tooke supposes, that we are to trace this preposition to an old noun signifying high; especially as ufar has the form of the comparative. Dr. Jamieson, in V. APON.]

1. Not under; noting being on the top.

As I did stand my watch upon the hill,
I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought
The wood began to move. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. Not within; being on the outside.

Blood that is upon the altar. Ex. xxix. 21.

4. By way of imprecation or infliction.

Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the world;
My soul to heaven, my blood upon your heads. Shakspeare.

No man, who had a mind to do wrong, would be aw'd from doing it, by a law that is always to be a sword in a scabbard, and must never be pleaded against him, or executed upon him. Kettlewell.

5. It expresses obtestation, or protestation.

How? that I should murder her?
Upon the love and truth, and vows, which I
Have made to thy command! — I, her! — her blood! Shakspeare.

6. It is used to express any hardship or mischief.

If we would neither impose upon ourselves, nor others, we must lay aside that fallacious method of censuring by the lump. Burnet.

That is not a fault inseparable from suits, but is the sin of the managers; it lies not naturally upon the thing, but only upon the contingent circumstances and manner of doing. Kettlewell.

7. In consequence of. Now little in use.

Let me not find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Then the princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension of the ambitious designs of that nation. Bacon.

I wish it may not be concluded, lest, upon second cogitations, there should be cause to alter. Bacon.

These forces took hold of divers; in some upon discontent, in some upon ambition, in some upon levity and desire of change, and in some few upon conscience and belief, but in most upon simplicity; and in divers out of dependance upon some of the better sort, who did in secret favour these bruits. Bacon.

He made a great difference between people that did rebel upon wantonness, and them that did rebel upon want. Bacon.

Upon pity they were taken away, upon ignorance they are again demanded. Hayward.

Promises can be of no force, unless they be believed to be conditional, and unless that duty proposed to be inforced by them, be acknowledged to be part of that condition, upon performance of which those promises do, and upon the neglect of which those promises shall not belong to any. Hammond.

The king had no kindness for him upon an old account, as remembering the part he had acted against the earl of Strafford. Clarendon.

Though sin offers itself in never so pleasing and alluring a dress at first, yet the remorse and inward regrets of the soul, upon the commission of it, infinitely overbalance those faint and transient gratifications. South, Serm.

The common corruption of human nature, upon the bare stock of its original depravation, does not usually proceed so far. South, Serm.

When we make judgements upon general presumptions, they are made rather from the temper of our own spirit, then from reason. Burnet.

'Tis not the thing that is done, but the intention in doing it, that makes good or evil. There is a great difference betwixt what we do upon force, and what upon inclination. L'Estrange.

The determination of the will upon enquiry, is following the direction of that guide. Locke.

There broke out an irreparable quarrel between their parents; the one valuing himself too much upon his birth, and the other upon his possessions. Spectator.

29. By; noting the means of support.

Upon a closer inspection of these bodies, the shells are affixed to the surfaces of them in such a manner, as bodies, lying on the sea-shores, upon which they live. Woodward.

30. Upon is, in many of its significations, now contracted into on, especially in poetry. See On. The meaning of this particle is very multifarious; for it is applied both to place, which seems its original signification; to time, which seems its secondary meaning; and to intellectual or corporeal operations. It always retains an intimation, more or less obscure, of some substratum, something precedent, or some subject. It is not easy to reduce it to any general idea.

U'PPER. adj. [a comparative from up.]

1. Superiour in place; higher.

Give the forehead a magestick grace, the mouth smiling; which you shall do by making a thin upper lip, and shadowing the mouth line a little at the corners. Peacham.

Our knight did bear no less a pack
Of his own buttocks on his back;
Which now had almost got the upper
Hand of his head for want of crupper. Hudibras.

The understanding was then clear, and the soul's upper region lofty and serene, free from the vapours of the inferior affections. South, Serm.

With speed to-night repair:
For not the gods, nor angry Jove will bear
Thy lawless wandering walks in upper air. Dryden.

Deep as the dark infernal waters lie,
From the bright regions of the chearful sky;
So far the proud ascending rocks invade
Heaven's upper realms, and cast a dreadful shade. Addison.

2. Higher in power or dignity.

The like corrupt and unreasonable custom prevailed far, and got the upper-hand of right reason with the greatest part. Hooker.

U'PPERMOST. adj. [superlative from upper.]

Heav'n-born charity! thy blessings shed;
Bid meagre want uprear her sickly head. Gay.

U'PRIGHT.† adj. [up and right; Saxon, upphihc.] This word, with its derivatives, is in prose accented on the first syllable; but in poetry seems to be accented indifferently on the first or second.

1. Straight up; perpendicularly erect.

Comb down his hair; look! look! it stands upright. Shakspeare.

They are upright as the palm-tree. Jer. x.

In the morning, taking of somewhat of easy digestion, as milk, furthers nourishment: but this would be done sitting upright, that the milk may pass more speedily to the stomach. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A tree at first setting, should not be shaken; and therefore put two little forks about the bottom of your trees, to keep them upright. Bacon. Nat. Hist.

Circe, the daughter of the sun; whose charms
Whoever tasted lost his upright shape,
And downward fell into a groveling swine. Milton, Comus.

Forthwith upright he rears from off the pool
His mighty stature. Milton, P. L.

2. Erected; pricked up.

All have their ears upright, waiting when the watchword shall come, that they should all arise unto rebellion. Spenser.

Stood Theodore surpris'd in deadly fright,
With chatt'ring teeth, and bristling hair upright. Dryden.

3. Honest; not declining from the right.

Such neighbour nearness should not partialize
Th' unstooping firmness of my upright soul. Shakspeare.

How hast thou instill'd
Thy malice into thousands, once upright
And faithful, now prov'd false! Milton, P. L.

The most upright of mortal men was he;
The most sincere, and holy woman, she. Dryden.

U'pright. n. s. Elevation; orthography.

You have the orthography, or upright of this ground-plat, and the explanation thereof, with a scale of feet and inches. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

U'prightly. adv. [from upright.]

1. Perpendicularly to the horizon.
2. Honestly; without deviation from the right.

Men by nature apter to rage than deceit; not greatly ambitious, more than to be well and uprightly dealt with. Sidney.

Princes in judgment, and their delegate judges, must judge the causes of all persons uprightly and impartially, without any personal consideration. Bp. Taylor.

To live uprightly then is sure the best,
To save ourselves, and not to damn the rest. Dryden.

U'prightness. n. s. [from upright.]

1. Perpendicular erection. This was anciently accented on the second.

So the fair tree, which still preserves
Her fruit and state, while no wind blows,
In storms from that uprightness swerves,
And the glad earth about her strows
With treasure from her yielding boughs. Waller.

2. Honesty; integrity.

The hypocrite bends his principles and practice to the fashion of a corrupt world; but the truly upright man is inflexible in his uprightness, and unalterable in his purpose. Atterbury.

To UPRI'SE. v. n. [up and rise.]

1. To rise from decumbiture.

Early, before the morn with crimson ray,
The windows of bright heaven opened had,
Through which into the world the dawning day
Might look, that maketh every creature glad,
Uprose Sir Guyon. Spenser.

Uprose the virgin with the morning light,
Obedient to the vision of the night. Pope.

2. To rise from below the horizon.

Uprose the sun. Cowley.

3. To rise with acclivity.

Was that the king that spurr'd his horse so hard
Against the steep uprising of the hill? Shakspeare.

Upri'se.† n. s.

1. Appearance above the horizon.

Did ever raven sing so like a lark.
That gives sweet tidings of the sun's uprise. Shakspeare.

2. Act of rising from decumbency.

Instead of musick and base flattering tongues,
Which wait to first salute my lord's uprise,
The cheerful lark wakes him with early songs. P. Fletcher, Purple Isl. C. 12.

Upri'sing.* n. s. [from uprise.]

1. Act of rising from below the horizon.

He gives those rebels battle at the sun's first uprising. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 64.

2. Act of rising from decumbency.

Thou knowest my down-sitting and mine uprising. Ps. cxxxix. 2.

U'PROAR. n. s. [oproer, Dutch. This word likewise is accented on the first syllable in prose; in verse, indifferently on either.] Tumult; bustle; disturbance: confusion.

The Jews which believed not, set all the city on an uproar. Acts, xvii. 5.

It were well if his holiness had not set the world in an uproar, by nourishing of war. Ralegh.

He levied forces in a disordered uproar, albeit the treason rested in him and some other his complices. Hayward.

The uproar was so loud, that the accusation itself could not be heard. Holiday.

Others with vast Typhœan rage more fell,
Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the air
In whirlwind: hell scarce holds the wild uproar. Milton, P. L.

Horror thus prevail'd,
And wild uproar! ah, who at length will end
This long pernicious fray? Philips.

The impiety of this sentiment set the audience in an uproar; and made Socrates, though an intimate friend of the poet, go out of the theatre with indignation. Addison.

To U'proar. v. a. [from the noun.] To throw into confusion. Not in use.

Had I power, I should
Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,
Uproar the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To Upro'll. v. a. [up and roll.] To roll up.

Thither they [the waters]
Hasted with glad precipitance, uproll'd
As drops on dust conglobing from the dry. Milton, P. L.

To Upro'ot. v. a. [up and root.] To tear up by the root.

Orpheus could lead the savage race,
And trees uprooted left their place,
Sequacious of the lyre;

But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher,
When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n,
An angel heard, and straight appear'd,
Mistaking earth for heaven. Dryden.

To UPRO'USE. v. a. [up and rouse.] To waken from sleep; to excite to action.

Thou art uprous'd by some distemperature. Shakspeare.

To UPSE'T.* v. a. [up and set.] To overturn; to overthrow: a low word.

U'PSHOT. n. s. [up and shot.] Conclusion; end; last amount; final event.

With this he kindleth his ambitious spighte
To like desire and praise of noble fame,
The only upshot, whereto he doth aim. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot. Shakspeare.

In this upshot, purposes mistook
Fall on th' inventors' heads. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Every leading demonstration to the main upshot of all, which is the proportion betwixt the sphere and cylinder, is a pledge of the wit and reason of that mathematician. More.

Upon the upshot, afflictions are but the methods of a merciful providence, to force us upon the only means of setting matters right. L'Estrange.

Here is an end of the matter, says the prophet: here is the upshot and result of all; here terminate both the prophecies of Daniel and St. John. Burnet, Theory.

Let's now make an end of matters peaceably, as we shall quickly come to the upshot of our affair. Arbuthnot.

At the upshot, after a life of perpetual application to reflect that you have been doing nothing for yourself, and that the same or less industry might have gained you a friendship that can never deceive or end; a glory, which, though not to be had till after death, yet shall be felt and enjoy'd to eternity. Pope.

U'PSIDE down.† [an adverbial form of speech; formerly up-so-down, or upsodown. "It maketh a londe turne up so downe." Gower, Conf. Am. B. 7. "A mannes conscyence stereth up so downe the memory." Bp. Fisher, Ps.]

1. With the lower part above the higher.

In the day-time they fish in their boats, which they draw unto the land at night; and, turning them upside down, sleep under them. Heylin.

2. In confusion; in complete disorder.

In his lap a mass of coin he told,
And turned upside down to feed his eye,
And covetous desire, with his huge treasure. Spenser.

The flood did not so turn upside down the face of the earth, as thereby it was made past knowledge, after the waters were decreased. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

The severe notions of Christianity turned all this upside down, filling all with surprize and amazement. They came upon the world, like light darting full upon the face of a man asleep, who had a mind not to be disturbed. South.

To UPSPRI'NG.* v. n. [up and spring.] To spring up.

The flames upspring, and cruelly they creep
From wall to roof. Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

These in flocks
Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upspring. Milton, P. L.

U'PSPRING. n. s. [up and spring.] This word seems to signify upstart; a man suddenly exalted. Not used.

The king doth wake to-night, and takes his rouse;
Keeps wassel, and the swagg'ring upspring reels. Shakspeare.

To UPSTA'ND. v. n. [up and stand.] To be erected.

Sea calves unwonted to fresh rivers fly;
The water snakes with scales upstanding die. May.

To UPSTA'RT. v. n. [up and start.] To spring up suddenly.

He upstarted brave
Out of the well, wherein he drenched lay,
As eagle fresh out of the ocean wave. Spenser.

Thus having spoke, he sat; thus answer'd then,
Upstarting from his throne, the king of men,
His breast with fury fill'd. Dryden.

U'PSTART. n. s. [up and start.] One suddenly raised to wealth, power, or honour; what suddenly rises and appears.

Two hundred in a place will be enough for the safeguard of that country, and keeping under all sudden upstarts, that shall seek to trouble the peace thereof. Spenser, on Ireland.

Mushrooms have two strange properties; the one, that they yield so delicious a meat; the other, that they come up so hastily, even in a night, and yet they are unsown: and therefore such as are upstarts in state, they call in reproach mushrooms. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Mean upstarts, when they come once to be preferred, forget their fathers. L'Estrange.

Trade, he said, carried from us the commodities of our country, and made a parcel of upstarts, as rich as men of the most antient families. Addison, Freeholder.

U'PSTART.* adj. Suddenly raised.

My rights and royalties
Pluckt from my arms perforce, and given away
To upstart unthrifts. Shakspeare.

The king did not neglect Ireland, the soil where these mushrooms and upstart weeds, that spring up in a night, did chiefly prosper. Bacon.

A place of bliss
In the purlieus of heaven, and therein plac'd
A race of upstart creatures, to supply
Perhaps our vacant room. Milton, P. L.

Inordinate desires,
And upstart passions, catch the government
From reason. Milton, P. L.

When the Pope hath attempted in this kind, his power hath been disavowed, as an illegal upstart pretence. Barrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

To UPSTA'Y. v. a. [up and stay.] To sustain; to support.

Them she upstays
Gently with myrtle band; mindless the while Herself, though fairest unsupported flow'r. Milton, P. L.

To UPSWA'RM. v. a. [up and swarm.] To raise in a swarm. Out of use.

You've taken up the subjects of my father;
And both against the voice of heaven and him
Have here upswarm'd them. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

To UPTA'KE. v. a. [up and take.] To take into the hands.

He hearkened to his reason, and the child
Uptaking, to the palmer gave to bear. Spenser.

To UPTE'AR.* v. a. [up and tear.] To tear up; to rend up.

The rest, in imitation; to like arms
Betook them, and the neighbouring hills uptore. Milton, P. L.

To UPTRA'IN. v. a. [up and train.] To bring up; to educate. Not used.

King Lear in happy peace long reign'd,
But had no issue male him to succeed,
But three fair daughters, which were well uptrain'd
In all that seem'd fit for kingly seed. Spenser.

To UPTU'RN. v. a. [up and turn.] To throw up; to furrow.

So scented the grim feature, and upturn'd
His nostrils wide into the murky air. Milton, P. L.

Beyond all marks, with many a giddy round
Down rushing, it upturns a hill of ground. Pope.

U'PWARD. adj. [up and peaꝛꝺ, Saxon.] Directed to a higher part.

Spread upon a lake, with upward eye,
A plump of fowl behold their foe on high. Dryden.

The angel said,
With upward speed his agile wings he spread. Prior.

U'PWARD. n. s. The top. Out of use.

From th' extremest upward of thy head,
To the descent and dust below thy foot,
A most toad-spotted traitor. Shakspeare. K. Lear.

U'PWARD. }
U'PWARDS. } adv. [up and peaꝛꝺ.]

1. Towards a higher place: opposed to downward.

I thought
To smooth your passage, and to soften death:
For I would have you, when you upward move,
Speak kindly of me to our friends above. Dryden.

In sheets of rain the sky descends,
And ocean swell'd with waters upwards tends;
One rising, falling one; the heav'ns and sea
Meet at their confines, in the middle way. Dryden.

A man on a cliff, is at liberty to leap twenty yards downwards into the sea, not because he has power to do the contrary action, which is to leap twenty yards upwards, for that he cannot do; but he is therefore free, because he has a power to leap, or not to leap. Locke.

2. Towards heaven and God.

Looking inward, we are stricken dumb: looking upward, we speak and prevail. Hooker.

3. With respect to the higher part.

Dagon, sea-monster! upward man,
And downward fish. Milton, P. L.

4. More than; with tendency to a higher or greater number.

Their counsel must seem very unseasonable, who advise men now to suspect that, wherewith the world hath had, by their own account, twelve hundred years' acquaintance and upwards, enough to take away suspicion. Hooker.

I have been your wife in this obedience
Upward of twenty years; and have been blest
With many children by you. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

5. Towards the source.

Be Homer's works your study;
Thence form your judgement, thence your notions bring,
And trace the muses upward to their spring. Pope.

To Upwhi'rl.* v. a. [up and whirl.] To raise upwards with quick rotation.

All these, upwhirl'd aloft,
Fly o'er the backside of the world far off
Into a Limbo large and broad. Milton, P. L.

To Upwi'nd. v. a. pret. and pass. upwound. [up and wind.] To convolve.

As she lay upon the dirty ground,
Her huge long tail her den all overspread;
Yet was in knots and many boughts upwound. Spenser.

URBA'NE.* adj. [urbanus, Lat.] Civil; courteous; elegant. Cockeram.

Dr. Warton thinks this epistle superior to any of Voiture's. The latter part of it is certainly urbane, elegant, and unaffected. Bowles, Pope's Works, i. 298.

Urba'nity.† n. s. [urbanité, Fr. urbanitas, Latin.] Civility; elegance; politeness; merriment; facetiousness.

In jest, what urbanity he uses! B. Jonson, Discov.

A rustical severity banishes all urbanity, whose harmless condition is consistent with religion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Raillery is the sauce of civil entertainment; and without some such tincture of urbanity, good-humour falters. L'Estrange.

Moral doctrine, and urbanity, or well-mannered wit, constitute the Roman satire. Dryden.

To U'rbanize.* v. a. [from urbane.] To render civil; to polish. Not in use.

Refined nations, whom learning and knowledge did first urbanize and polish. Howell, Instr. For. Trav. (1642,) p. 9.

U'rchin. n. s. [heureuchin, Armorick; erinaceus, Lat.]

1. A hedge-hog.

Urchins shall, for that vast of night that they may work,
All exercise on thee. Shakspeare, Tempest.

A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing snakes,
Ten thousand swelling toads, as many urchins,
Would make such fearful and confused cries,
As any mortal body, hearing it,
Would strait fall mad. Titus Andronicus.

That nature designs the preservation of the more infirm creatures, by the defensive armour it hath given them, is demonstrable in the common hedge-hog, or urchin. Ray.

2. A name of slight anger to a child.

Pleas'd Cupid heard, and check'd his mother's pride:
And who's blind now, mamma? the urchin cry'd.
'Tis Cloe's eye, and cheek, and lip, and breast:
Friend Howard's genius fancy'd all the rest. Prior.

Ure. n. s. Practice; use; habit. Obsolete.

Is the warrant sufficient for any man's conscience to build such proceedings upon, as are and have been put in ure for the establishment of that cause? Hooker.

He would keep his hand in ure with somewhat of greater value, till he was brought to justice. L'Estrange.

U'reter. n. s. [οὐρητὴρ; uretere, Fr.] Ureters are two long and small canals from the bason of the kidnies, one on each side. Their use is to carry the urine from the kidnies to the bladder. Quincy.

The kidnies and ureters serve for expurgation. Wiseman.

U'rethra. n. s. [οὐρηθρα; uretre, Fr.] The passage of the urine.

Caruncles are loose flesh, arising in the urethra. Wiseman.

To URGE. v. a. [urgeo, Latin.]

1. To incite; to push; to press by motives.

You do mistake your business: my brother
Did urge me in his act. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

What I have done my safety urg'd me to. Shakspeare.

This urges me to fight, and fires my mind. Dryden.

High Epidaurus urges on my speed,
Fam'd for his hills, and for his horse's breed. Dryden.

The heathens had but uncertain apprehensions of what urges men most powerfully to forsake their sins. Tillotson.

2. To provoke; to exasperate.

Urge not my father's anger, Eglamour,
But think upon my grief. Shakspeare.

3. To follow close, so as to impel.

Man? and for ever? wretch! what wouldst thou have?
Heir urges heir, like wave impelling wave. Pope.

4. To labour vehemently; to do with eagerness, or violence.

He, seiz'd with horror, in the shades of night,
Through the thick desarts headlong urg'd his flight. Pope.

5. To press; to enforce.

The enemy's in view; draw up your powers;
Your haste is now urg'd on you. Shakspeare.

Urge your petitions in the street. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

And great Achilles urge the Trojan fate. Dryden.

6. To press as an argument.

He pleaded still not guilty;
The king's attorney, on the contrary,
Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confessions,
Of divers witnesses. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Urge the necessity and state of times,
And be not peevish. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

But against all this, some may urge two places, which seem to take away all suits among Christians. Kettlewell.

7. To importune; to solicit.

He urged sore,
With piercing words and pitiful implore,
Him hasty to arise. Spenser.

8. To press in opposition, by way of objection.

Though every man have a right in dispute to urge a false religion, with all its absurd consequences; yet it is barbarous incivility scurrilously to sport with that which others account religion. Tillotson.

To Urge. v. n. To press forward.

A palace, when 'tis that which it should be,
Stands such, or else decays:
But he which dwells there is not so; for he
Strives to urge upward, and his fortune raise. Donne.

U'rgency.† n. s. [from urgent.]

1. Pressure of difficulty or necessity.

Being for some hours extremely pressed by the necessities of nature, I was under great difficulties between urgency and shame. Swift, Gulliv. Trav.

2. Entreaty; solicitation.

Neither would he have done it at all but at my urgency. Swift.

U'RGENT. adj. [urgent, Fr. urgens, Lat.]

1. Cogent; pressing; violent.

Things so ordained are to be kept; howbeit not necessarily, any longer than till there grow some urgent cause to ordain the contrary. Hooker.

Not alone
The death of Fulvia, but more urgent touches,
Do strongly speak to us. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

This ever hath been that true cause of more wars, than upon all other occasions, though it least partakes of the urgent necessity of state. Ralegh.

Let a father seldom strike, but upon very urgent necessity, and as the last remedy. Locke on Education.

2. Importunate; vehement in solicitation.

The Egyptians were urgent upon the people, that they might send them out in haste. Exod. xii. 33.

U'RGENTLY. adv. [from urgent.] Cogently; violently; vehemently; importunately.

Acrimony in their blood, and afflux of humours to their lungs, urgently indicate phlebotomy. Harvey.

U'RGER.† n. s. [from urge.] One who presses; importuner.

More repeaters of their popular oratorious vehemencies, than urgers and confirmers of their argumentative strength.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 122.

I wish Pope were as great an urger as I. Swift.

U'RGEWONDER. n. s. A sort of grain.

This barley is called by some urgewonder. Mortimer.

U'RIM. n. s.

Urim and thummim were something in Aaron's breast-plate; but what, criticks and commentators are by no means agreed. The word urim signifies light, and thummim perfection. It is most probable that they were only names given to signify the clearness and certainty of the divine answers which were obtained by the high priest consulting God with his breast-plate on, in contradistinction to the obscure, enigmatical, uncertain, and imperfect answers of the heathen oracles. Newton, Notes on Milton.

He in celestial panoply, all arm'd
Of radiant urim, work divinely wrought. Milton, P. L.

U'RINAL. n. s. [urinal, Fr. from urine.] A bottle, in which water is kept for inspection.

These follies shine through you, like the water in an urinal.
Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

A candle out of a musket will pierce through an inch board, or an urinal force a nail through a plank. Brown.

This hand, when glory calls,
Can brandish arms, as well as urinals. Garth.

Some with scymitars in their hands, and others with urinals, ran to and fro. Spectator.

U'RINARY. adj. [from urine.] Relating to the urine.*

The urachus or ligamentous passage is derived from the bottom of the bladder, whereby it dischargeth the waterish and urinary part of its contents. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Diureticks that relax the urinary passages, should be tried before such a stimulate. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

U'RINATIVE. adj. Working by urine; provoking urine.

Medicines urinative do not work by rejection and indigestion as solutive do. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

URINA'TOR. n. s. [urinateur, Fr. urinator, Lat.] A diver; one who searches under water.

The precious things that grow there, as pearl, may be much more easily fetched up by the help of this, than by any other way of the urinators. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

Those relations of urinators belong only to those places where they have dived, which are always rocky. Ray.

U'RINE. n. s. [urine, Fr. urina, Latin.] Animal water.

Drink, Sir, is a great provoker of nose-painting, sleep, and urine. Shakspeare.

As though there were a seminality in urine, or that, like the seed, it carried with it the idea of every part, they foolishly believe we can visibly behold therein the anatomy of every particle. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The chyle cannot pass by urine nor sweat. Arbuthnot.

To U'RINE. v. n. [uriner, Fr. from the noun.] To make water.

Places where men urine commonly, have some smell of violets. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

No oviparous animal, which spawn or lay eggs, doth urine, except the tortoise. Brown, Vulg. Err.

U'RINOUS. adj. [from urine.] Partaking of urine.

The putrid matter being distilled, affords a water impregnated with an urinous spirit, like that obtainable from animal substances. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

URN. n. s. [urne, Fr. urna, Lat.]

1. Any vessel, of which the mouth is narrower than the body.

Vesta is not displeas'd, if her chaste urn
Do with repaired fuel burn:
But my saint frowns, though to her honour'd name,
I consecrate a never-dying flame. Carew.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears,
And lives, and crimes, with his assessors, hears;
Round, in his urn, the blended balls he rolls;
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls. Dryden.

2. A water-pot; particularly that in the sign of Aquarius.

The fish oppose the maid, the wat'ry urn,
With adverse fires sees raging Leo burn. Creech.

3. The vessel in which the remains of burnt bodies were put.

Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tombless with no remembrance over them. Shakspeare.

A rustick digging in the ground by Padua, found an urn, or earthen pot, in which there was another urn; and in this lesser, a lamp clearly burning. Wilkins.

His scatter'd limbs with my dead body burn;
And once more join us in the pious urn. Dryden.

To URN.* v. a. To enclose in an urn.

From my hand Cornelia shall take
And urn thy reliques. May, Lucan, (1627,) B. 8.

URO'SCOPY. n. s. [οὖρον and σκέπτω.] Inspection of urine.

In this work, attempts will exceed performances; it being composed by snatches of time, as medical vacations, and uroscopy would permit. Brown, Vulg. Err.

U'RRY. n. s. A mineral.

In the coal-mines they dig a blue or black clay, that lies near the coal, commonly called urry, which is an unripe coal, and is very proper for hot lands, especially pasture-ground.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

U'RSULINE.* adj. [from Ursula.] Denoting an order of nuns. Mason.

We went also to the Chapels of the Jesuits, and Ursuline nuns, the latter of which is very richly adorned. Gray, Lett.

US.† [M. Goth. and Germ. uns; Su. Goth. oss.] The oblique case of we.

The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day. Deut. v.

U'SABLE.* adj. That may be used.

U'SAGE. n. s. [usage, Fr.]

1. Treatment.

Which way
Might'st thou deserve, or they impose this usage. Shakspeare.

The lustre in your eye, heav'n in your cheek,
Plead you fair usage. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

My brother
Is pris'ner to the bishop, at whose hands
He hath good usage, and great liberty. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The rest were sav'd, and made enthralled swaines
To all the basest usages there bred. Chapman.

What usage have I met with from this adversary, who passes by the very words I translated, and produces other passages; and then hectors and cries out of my disingenuity? Stillingfleet.

Are not hawks brought to the hand, and to the lure; and lions reclaimed by good usage? L'Estrange.

He was alarmed with the expectation of that usage, which was then a certain consequent of such meritorious acts. Fell.

Neptune took unkindly to be bound,
And Eurus never such hard usage found
In his Æolian prison. Dryden.

2. Custom; practice long continued.

Of things once received and confirmed by use, long usage is a law sufficient. In civil affairs, when there is no other law, custom itself doth stand for law. Hooker.

3. Manners; behaviour. Obsolete.

A gentle nymph was found,
Hight Astery, excelling all the crew,
In courteous usage, and unstained hue. Spenser.

U'SAGER. n. s. [usager, Fr. from usage.] One who has the use of any thing in trust for another.

My lord received from the countess of Warwick, a lady powerful in the court, and indeed a virtuous user of her power, the best advice that was ever given. Wotton.

U'SHER.† n. s. [huissier, Fr. husher, old Engl. "A gentle husher." Spenser, F. Q. This is also the correct spelling: the word being originally from huis, Fr. a door.]

1. One whose business is to introduce strangers, or walk before a person of high rank.

The wife of Antony
Should have an army for an usher, and
The neighs of horse to tell her approach
Long ere she did appear. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

You make guards and ushers march before, and then enters your prince. Tatler.

Gay paid his courtship with the croud,
As far as modest pride allow'd;
Rejects a servile usher's place,
And leaves St. James's in disgrace. Swift.

2. An under-teacher; one who introduces young scholars to higher learning.

Though grammar's profits less than rhetorick's are,
Yet ev'n in those his usher claims a share. Dryden.

To U'SHER. v. a. [from the noun.] To introduce as a forerunner or harbinger; to forerun.

No sun shall ever usher forth my honours,
Or gild again the noble troops that waited
Upon my smiles. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The sun,
Declin'd, was hasting now with prone career
To the ocean isles, and in the ascending scale
Of heaven, the stars, that usher evening rose. Milton, P. L.

As the deluge is represented a disruption of the abyss, so the future combustion of the earth is to be usher'd in, and accompanied with violent impressions upon nature, and the chief will be earthquakes. Burnet, Theory.

With songs and dance we celebrate the day,
And with due honours usher in the May. Dryden.

The examiner was ushered into the world by a letter, setting forth the great genius of the author. Addison.

Oh name for ever sad! for ever dear!
Still breath'd in sighs, still usher'd with a tear. Pope.

USQUEBA'UGH.† n. s. [an Irish and Erse word, which signifies the water of life.] It is a compounded distilled spirit, being drawn on aromaticks; and the Irish sort is particularly distinguished for its pleasant and mild flavour. USUFRU'CTUARY. n. s. [usufructuaire, Fr. usufructuarius, Lat.] One that has the use and temporary profit, not the property of a thing.

The parsons of parishes are not in law accounted proprietors, but only usufructuaries, as having no right of fee-simple vested in them. Ayliffe.

To U'SURE.† v. n. [usura, Lat.] To practise usury; to take interest for money.

Is this the balsam that the usuring senate
Pours into captains' wounds? Shakspeare, Timon.

I do not love the usuring Jew. Beaum. and Fl. Litt. Thief.

Look into all the caves and dens of the wildest desart; see if there be any such tiger or wolf, as an enemy, as an usuring oppressor. Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

U'SURER. n. s. [usurier, Fr. usura, Lat.] One who puts money out at interest. Commonly used for one that takes exorbitant interest.

Fie; thou sham'st thy shape, thy love, thy wit;
Which, like an usurer abound'st in all,
And usest none in that true use indeed,
Which should bedeck thy shape, thy love, thy wit. Shakspeare.

When usurers tell their gold i' the field,
And bawds and whores do churches build. Shakspeare.

If thou lend money to any that is poor, thou shalt not be to him as an usurer, nor lay upon him usury. Ex. xxii. 25.

There may be no commutative injustice, while each retains a mutual benefit, the usurer for his money, the borrower for his industry. Child on Trade.

The asses usuræ occasioned great tumults among the people; yet he that took it was not reckoned to transgress any law; and there were some greedy usurers that exacted double, triple. Arbuthnot on Coins.

USU'RIOUS. adj. [usuaire, Fr. from usury.] Given to the practice of usury; exorbitantly greedy of profit.

For every hour that thou wilt spare me now,
I will allow,
Usurious god of love, twenty to thee,
When with my brown my grey hairs equal be. Donne.

To USU'RP. v. a. [usurper, Fr. usurpo, Latin.] To possess by force or intrusion; to seize, or possess without right.

So ugly a darkness, as if it would prevent the night's coming, usurped the day's right. Sidney.

Not having the natural superiority of fathers, their power must be usurped, and then unlawful; or if lawful, then granted or consented unto by them over whom they exercise the same, or else given them extraordinarily from God. Hooker.

In as much as the due estimation of heavenly truth dependeth wholly upon the known and approved authority of those famous oracles of God, it greatly behoveth the church to have always most special care, lest human inventions usurp the room and title of divine worship. Hooker.

Victorious prince of York!
Before I see thee seated in that throne,
Which now the house of Lancaster usurps,
These eyes shall never close. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

What art thou, that usurp'st this time of night,
Together with that fair and warlike form? Shakspeare.

Their fox-like thefts are so rank, as a man may find whole pages usurped from one author. B. Jonson.

So he dies,
But soon revives; death over him no power
Shall long usurp; ere the third dawning light
Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise
Out of his grave. Milton, P. L.

All fountains of the deep
Broke up, shall heave the ocean to usurp
Beyond all bounds, till inundation rise
Above the highest hills. Milton, P. L.

Farewell court,
Where vice not only hath usurpt the place,
But the reward, and even the name of virtue. Denham.

Your care about your banks infers a fear
Of threat'ning floods, and inundations near:
If so, a just reprise would only be
Of what the land usurp'd upon the sea. Dryden.

Who next usurps will a just prince appear,
So much your ruin will his reign endear. Dryden.

Struggling in vain, impatient of her load,
And labouring underneath the pond'rous god;
The more she strove to shake him from her breast,
With more and far superior force he press'd,
Commands his entrance, and without controul,
Usurps her organs, and inspires her soul. Dryden.

Who's this, that dares usurp
The guards and habit of Numidia's prince? Addison, Cato.

USURPA'TION.† n. s. [usurpation, Fr. from usurp.]

1. Forcible, unjust, illegal seizure or possession.

The Piercies,
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne. Shakspeare.

Succeeding kings' recovery of their right from unjust usurpations, shall never be prejudiced by any act of mine. King Charles.

To raise a tempest on the sea was usurpation on the prerogative of Neptune, who had given him no leave. Dryden.

Oh baseness to support a tyrant throne,
And crush your freeborn brethren of the world!
Nay, to become a part of usurpation,
T' espouse the tyrant's person and her crimes. Dryden.

Whatever opposition was made to the usurpations of king James, proceeded altogether from the church of England. Swift.

2. Use; usage.

There can be no kind of certainty in any such observations of the articles, because the Greeks promiscuously often use them or omit them, without any reason of their usurpation or omission. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

USU'RPER. n. s. [from usurp. One who seizes or possesses that to which he has no right. It is generally used of one who excludes the right heir from the throne.

Ever sithence he hath continued his first usurped power, and now exacteth upon all men what he list: so that now to subdue or expel an usurper, should be no unjust enterprize, but a restitution of antient right unto the crown. Spenser.

Richard, duke of York,
Was rightful heir unto the English crown;
And that your majesty was an usurper. Shakspeare.

But this usurper his encroachment proud,
Stays not on man; to God his tower intends
Siege and defiance. Milton, P. L.

Few usurpers to the shades descend
By a dry death, or with a quiet end. Dryden.

He griev'd, the land he freed should be opppress'd,
And he less for it than usurpers do. Dryden.

USU'RPINGLY. adv. [from usurp.] Without just claim.

Lay aside the sword,
Which sways usurpingly these several titles,
And put the same into young Arthur's hand,
Thy right royal sovereign. Shakspeare, K. John.

U'SURY. n. s. [usuré, Fr. usura, Lat.]

1. Money paid for the use of money; interest.

He that high does sit, and all things see,
With equal eyes their merits to restore;
Behold, what ye this day have done for me,
And what I cannot quit, requite with usury. Spenser.

The wished day is come at last,
That shall, for all the pains and sorrows past,
Pay to her usury of long delight. Spenser.

Our angles are like money put to usury; they may thrive, though we sit still and do nothing. Walton, Angler.

What he borrows from the antients, he repays with usury of his own; in coin as good, and almost as universally valuable. Dryden, Ded. to Juv.

2. The practice of taking interest. It is commonly used with some reproach.

Usury bringeth the treasure of a realm into few hands: for the usurer being at certainties, and others at uncertainties, at the end, most of the money will be in the box. Bacon.

UTE'NSIL. n. s. [utensile, Fr. utensile, low Lat.] An instrument for any use, such as the vessels of the kitchen, or tools of a trade.

Burn but his books; he has brave utensils,
Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal. Shakspeare.

Mules after these, camels and dromedaries,
And waggons fraught with utensils of war. Milton, P. R.

Tithes and lands given to God are never; and plate, vestments, and other sacred utensils, are seldom consecrated. South.

The springs of life their former vigour feel;
Such zeal he had for that vile utensil. Garth, Dispensary.

U'TERINE.† adj. [uterin, Fr. uterinus, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the womb.

In hot climates, and where the uterine parts exceed in heat, by the coldness of some simple, they may be reduced unto a conceptive constitution. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The vessels of the interior glandulous substance of the womb, are contorted with turnings and meanders, that they might accommodate themselves without danger of rupture to the necessary extension of the uterine substance. Ray.

2. Born of the same mother, but having a different father.

He was nephew to him by his brother uterine, Edmond Tudor. Sir G. Buck, Rich. III. p. 51.

U'TERUS. n. s. [Latin.] The womb.

UTI'LITY. n. s. [utilité, Fr. utilitas, Lat.] Usefulness; profit; convenience; advantageousness: applied to things only: as, this book is of great utility; not, this book was written for the utility of scholars.

Those things which have long gone together, are confederate; whereas new things piece not so well; but though they help by their utility, yet they trouble by their inconformity. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Should we blindly obey the restraints of physicians and astrologers, we should confine the utility of physick unto a very few days. Brown, Vulg. Err.

M. Zulichem desired me that I would give a relation of the cure of the gout, that might be made publick, as a thing which might prove of common utility to so great numbers as were subject to that disease. Temple.

U'TIS.† n. s. A word which probably is corrupted, at least, is not now understood. Utis was the octave of a saint's day, and may perhaps be taken for any festivity. Dr. Johnson. — Utas is the word in our old lexicography. [eahta, Sax. octavæ festi alicujus. Skinner. Fr. huit, octo.]

Then here will be old utis: it will be an excellent stratagem. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

U'TMOST. adj. [utmœſt, Saxon; from utter.]

1. Extreme; placed at the extremity.

Much like a subtle spider, which doth sit
In middle of her web, which spreadeth wide;
If ought do touch the utmost thread of it,
She feels it instantly on every side. Davies.

As far remov'd from God and light of heaven,
As from the center thrice to th' utmost pole. Milton, P. L.

I went, by your command,
To view the utmost limits of the land. Dryden.

2. Being in the highest degree.

I'll undertake to bring him,
Where he shall answer by a lawful form,
In peace to his utmost peril. Shakspeare, Coriol.

U'TMOST. n. s. The most that can be; the greatest power; the highest degree; the greatest effort.

What miscarries,
Shall be the general's fault, though he perform
To the utmost of a man. Shakspeare, Coriol.

I will be free,
Even to the utmost as I please in words. Shakspeare.

Such a conscience, as has employed the utmost of its ability to give itself the best information, and clearest knowledge of its duty, that it can, is a rational ground for a man to build such an hope upon. South.

Try your fortune.——
—I have to the utmost. Dost thou think me desperate
Without just cause? Dryden, All for Love.

A man, having carefully enquired into all the grounds of probability and unlikeliness, and done his utmost to inform himself in all particulars, may come to acknowledge on which side the probability rests. Locke.

The enemy thinks of raising threescore thousand men: let us perform our utmost, and we shall overwhelm them with our multitudes. Addison.

UTO'PIAN.* } adj. [from Sir Thomas More's Utopia,
UTO'PICAL. } or imaginary commonwealth; Gr. εὖ, benè, and τόπος, locus.] Ideal; not real. Bullokar has utopian, which he terms imaginary, feigned fabulous.

Let no idle Donatist of Amsterdam dream hence of an utopical perfection. Bp. Hall, Beauty and Unity of the Ch.

The task is so difficult, that I look upon it rather as an utopian idea. Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 42.

U'TTER. adj. [utter, Saxon.]

1. Situate on the outside, or remote from the centre.

In my flight
Through utter and through middle darkness borne,
I sung of chaos, and eternal night. Milton, P. L.

2. Placed beyond any compass; out of any place.

Pursue these sons of darkness; drive them out
From all heaven's bounds, into the utter deep. Milton, P. L.

3. Extreme; excessive; utmost. This seems to be Milton's meaning here; though the former sense may serve.

Such place eternal Justice had prepar'd
For those rebellious; here their prison ordain'd
In utter darkness; and their portion set
As far remov'd from God, and light of heav'n,
As from the center thrice to th' utmost pole. Milton, P. L.

4. Complete; total.

The parliament thought the utter taking it away necessary for the preservation of the kingdom. Clarendon.

5. Peremptory.

There could not be any other estimate made of the loss, than by the utter refusal of the auxiliary regiments of London and Kent to march farther. Clarendon.

6. Perfect; mere.

They feel fewer corporal pains, and are utter strangers to all those anxious thoughts which disquiet mankind. Atterbury.

To UTTER.† v. a. [from the adjective; to make public, or let out; palam facere.]

1. To speak; to pronounce; to express.

Men spake not with the instruments of writing, neither writ with the instruments of speech; and yet things recorded with the one, and uttered with the other, may be preached well enough with both. Hooker.

These very words I've heard him utter. Shakspeare.

There's more gold: but, sirrah,
We say the dead are well. Bring it to that,
The gold I give thee will I melt, and pour
Down thy ill-uttering throat. Shakspeare.

Shall not they teach thee and tell thee, and utter words but of their heart? Job, viii. 10.

Who knows but his poor, bleeding heart,
Amidst its agonies, remember'd Marcia,
And the last words he utter'd, call'd me cruel! Addison.

2. To disclose; to discover; to publish.

When do partial and sinister affections more utter themselves, than when an election is committed to many? Whitgift.

Were it folly to be modest in uttering what is known to all the world? Ralegh.

I have waded through the whole cause, searching the truth by the causes of truth. Hooker.

Virtue gives herself light, through darkness for to wade. Spenser.

Occasions you have met with to excite your faculties to wade a little farther into the positive part of these doctrines. Hammond.

I should chuse rather with spitting and scorn to be tumbled into the dust in blood, bearing witness to any known truth of our Lord; than, by a denial of those truths, through blood and perjury wade to a sceptre, and lord it in a throne. South.

'Tis not to my purpose to wade into those bottomless controversies, which, like a gulph, have swallowed up so much time of learned men. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

The dame
Now try'd the stairs, and wading through the night,
Search'd all the deep recess, and usher'd into light. Dryden.
The wrathful God then plunges from above,
And where in thickest waves the sparkles drove,
There lights, and wades through fumes, and gropes his way,
Half sing'd, half stiff'd. Dryden.

The king's admirable conduct has waded through all these difficulties. Davenant.

Simonides, the more he contemplated the nature of the Deity, found that he waded but the more out of his depth, and that he lost himself in the thought. Addison.

WA'FER. n. s. [wafel, Dutch.]

1. A thin cake.

Wife, make us a dinner; spare flesh, neither corn;
Make wafers and cakes, for our sheepe must be shorne. Tusser.

Poor Sancho they persuaded that he enjoyed a great dominion, and then gave him nothing to subsist upon but wafers and marmalade. Pope.

2. The bread given in the eucharist by the Romanists.

That the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once; that the whole body should lie hid in a little thin wafer; yet so, that the members thereof should not one run into another, but continue distinct, and have an order agreeable to a man's body, it doth exceed reason. Bp. Hall.

3. Paste made to close letters.

To WAFT.† v. a. preter. wafted, or perhaps waft; particip. passive wafted, or waft. [probably from wave. Dr. Johnson.— Serenius refers the word to veifa, Icel. wefta, Sueth. vibrare.]

1. To carry through the air, or on the water.

A braver choice of dauntless spirits,
Than now the English bottoms have waft o'er,
Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakspeare.

Our high admiral
Shall waft them over with our royal fleet. Shakspeare.

Thence wafted with a merry gale,
Sees Leinster, and the golden vale. Drayton.

Nor dares his transport-vessel cross the waves,
With such whose bones are not compos'd in graves:
A hundred years they wander on the shore;
At length, their penance done, are wafted o'er. Dryden.

Lend to this wretch your hand, and waft him o'er
To the sweet banks of yon forbidden shore. Dryden.

From hence might first spring that opinion of the vehicles of spirits; the vulgar conceiving that the breath was that wherein the soul was wafted and carried away. Ray.

They before wafted over their troops into Sicily in open vessels. Arbuthnot on Coins.

In vain you tell your parting lover,
You wish fair winds may waft him over:
Alas: what winds can happy prove,
That bear me far from what I love? Prior.

Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
And waft a sigh from Indus to the pole. Pope.

2. To buoy; to make float; to hinder from sinking.

Whether cripples, who have lost their thighs, will not sink but float; their lungs being able to waft up their bodies, which are in others overpoised by the hinder legs, we have not made experiment. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. To beckon; to inform by a sign of any thing moving.

But soft! who wafts us yonder? Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

It wafts you to a more removed ground. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

4. To turn.

Even now I met him
With customary compliment; when he
Wafting his eyes to the contrary, and falling
A lip of much contempt, speeds from me. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

To WAFT.† v. n. To float.

Such an one may waft up and down with the wind. Bp. Hall, Serm. before the King.

It wafted nearer yet, and then she knew,
That what before she but surmis'd, was true. Dryden.

Those trumpets his triumphant entry tell,
And now the shouts waft near the citadel. Dryden.

WAFT. n. s. [from the verb.]

I wept for woe. Dryden, Theoc.

WAG. n. s. [pœgan, Saxon, to cheat.] Any one ludicrously mischievous; a merry droll.

Cupid the wag, that lately conquer'd had
Wise counsellors, stout captains puissant;
And ty'd them fast to lead his triumphs bad,
Glutted with them, now plays with meanest things. Sidney.

Was not my lord the verier wag o' th' two. Shakspeare.

We wink at wags, when they offend,
And spare the boy, in hopes the man may mend. Dryden.

A counsellor never pleaded without a piece of packthread in his hand, which he used to twist about a finger all the while he was speaking: the wags used to call it the thread of his discourse. Addison.

WAGE.† n. s. the plural wages is now only used. [wegen, or wagen, German; gage, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — It is pronounced a corruption of the Su. Goth. wad, a pledge; whence the old Engl. word wad, in the same sense.]

1. Pay given for service.

All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cup of their deservings. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The last petition is for my men; they are the poorest,
But poverty could never draw them from me;
That they may have their wages duly paid them,
And something over to remember me. Shakspeare.

He with a mighty wage,
Won such, themselves by oath as deeply durst engage. Drayton.

By Tom Thumb, a fairy page;
He sent it, and doth him engage,
By promise of a mighty wage,
It secretly to carry. Drayton, Nymphid.

The thing itself is not only our duty, but our glory: and he who hath done this work, has in the very work partly received his wages. South.

2. Gage; pledge.

But th' elfin knight, which ought that warlike wage,
Disdain'd to loose the meed he wonne in fray. Spenser, F. Q.

To WAGE. v. a. [The origination of this word, which is now only used in the phrase to wage war, is not easily discovered: wagen, in German, is to attempt any thing dangerous.]

1. To attempt; to venture.

We must not think the Turk is so unskilful,
Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain,
To wake and wage a danger profitless. Shakspeare.

2. To make; to carry on. Applied to war.

Return to her, and fifty men dismiss'd!
No; rather I abjure all roofs and chuse
To wage against the enmity o' th' air,
To be a comrade with the wolf. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The sonnes of Greece wag'd war at Troy. Chapman.

Your reputation wages war with the enemies of your royal family, even within their trenches. Dryden.

This great lord came not over with any great number of waged soldiers. Davies on Ireland.

5. [In law.]

When an action of debt is brought against one, as for money or chattels, left or lent the defendant, the defendant may wage his law; that is, swear, and certain persons with him, that he owes nothing to the plaintiff in manner as he hath declared. The offer to make the oath is called wager of law: and when it is accomplished, it is called the making or doing of law. Blount.

WA'GER.† n. s. [from wage, to venture.]

1. A bett; any thing pledged upon a chance or performance.

Love and mischief made a wager, which should have most power in me. Sidney.

Full fast she fled, ne ever look'd behind;
As if her life upon the wager lay. Spenser.

As soon hereafter will I wagers lay
'Gainst what an oracle shall say,
Fool that I was, to venture to deny
A tongue so us'd to victory,
A tongue so blest by nature and by art
That never yet it spoke but gain'd a heart. Cowley.

Besides these plates for horse-races, the wagers may be as the persons please. Temple.

Factious, and fav'ring this or t'other side,
Their wagers back their wishes. Dryden.

If any atheist can stake his soul for a wager against such an inexhaustible disproportion; let him never hereafter accuse others of credulity. Bentley, Serm.

2. Subject on which betts are laid.

With wantonizing years. Daniel.

The mind of man would, if let alone, launch out and wantonize in a boundless enjoyment of all its appetites and inclinations. South, Serm. iii. 227.

WA'NTONLY. adv. [from wanton.] Lasciviously; frolicksomely; gayly; sportively; carelessly.

Into what sundry gyres her wondered self she throws
And oft insles the shore, as wantonly she flows. Drayton.

Thou dost but try how far I can forbear,
Nor art that monster which thou wouldst appear:
But do not wantonly my passion move,
I pardon nothing that relates to love. Dryden.

WA'NTONNESS. n. s. [from wanton.]

1. Lasciviousness; lechery.

The spirit of wantonness is scar'd out of him. Shakspeare.

Bulls and goats bled apace; but neither the violence of the one, nor the wantonness of the other, ever died a victim at any of their altars. South.

2. Sportiveness; frolick; humour.

When I was in France,
Young would be as sad as night,
Only for wantonness. Shakspeare, K. John.

Love, rais'd on beauty, will like that decay;
Our hearts may bear its slender chain a day:
As flowery bands in wantonness are worn,
A morning's pleasure, and at evening torn. Pope.

3. Licentiousness; negligence of restraint.

The tumults threatened to abuse all acts of grace, and turn them into wantonness. King Charles.

Wantonness and pride
Raise out of friendship hostile deeds in peace. Milton, P. L.

WA'NTWIT. n. s. [want and wit.] A fool; an idiot.

Such a wantwit sadness makes of me,
That I have much ado to know myself. Shakspeare.

WA'NTY. n. s. [I know not whence derived.] A broad girth of leather, by which the load is bound upon the horse; a surcingle.

A panel and wanty, pack-saddle and ped,
With line to fetch litter. Tusser.

WA'PED.† adj. [Of this word I know not the original, except that to whape, to shock, or deject, is found in Spenser; from which the meaning may be gathered.] Dejected; crushed by misery. "This makes the waped widow wed again." Shaksp. Dr. Johnson. — The word in Shakspeare is not waped but wappen'd; which, as Mr. Mason observes, is of disputable authority; and upon the meaning of it the commentators differ. Warburton first gave waped for wappen'd, by way of paraphrase.

WA'PENTAKE.† n. s. [from pæpun, Saxon, and take; wapentakium, wapentagium, low Lat. Dr. Johnson. — Rather from the Goth. tekan, to touch, than from take.]

Wapentake is all one with what we call a hundred: as, upon a meeting for that purpose, they touched each other's weapons, in token of their fidelity and allegiance. Cowel.

Hundred signifieth a hundred pledges, which were under the command and assurance of their alderman; which, as I suppose, was also called a wapentake, so named, of touching the weapon or spear of their alderman, and swearing to follow him faithfully, and serve their prince truly. But others think, that a wapentake was ten hundreds, or boroughs. Spenser.

Let 'em get but ten mile out a town,
They outswagger all the wapentake. B. Jonson, New Inn.

WA'PPERED.* adj. Restless; fatigued. Spoken of a sick person, in Gloucestershire. Grose. Hence in Beaumont and Fletcher unwappered, fresh.

We come towards the gods,
Young, and unwapper'd; not halting under crimes
Many and stale. Beaum. and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

WAR.† n. s. [werre, old Dutch; guerre, Fr. wer, German and A. Saxon, which Wachter derives from weren, to defend.]

1. War may be defined the exercise of violence under sovereign command against withstanders; force, authority, and resistance being the essential parts thereof. Violence, limited by authority, is sufficiently distinguished from robbery, and the like outrages; yet consisting in relation towards others, it necessarily requires a supposition of resistance, whereby the force of war becomes different from the violence inflicted upon slaves or yielding malefactors. Ralegh.

On, you noblest English,
Whose blood is fetch'd from fathers of war proof. Shakspeare.

After a denunciation or indiction of war, the war is no more confined to the place of the quarrel, but left at large. Bacon.

I saw the figure and armour of him, that headed the peasants in the war upon Bern, with the several weapons found on his followers. Addison.

2. The instruments of war, in poetical language.

The god of love inhabits there,
With all his rage, and dread, and grief, and care;
His complement of stores, and total war. Prior.

3. Forces; army. Poetically.

On the embattled ranks the waves return,
And overwhelm the war. Milton, P. L.

4. The profession of arms.

Thine Almighty word leapt down from heaven, as a fierce man of war into the midst of a land of destruction. Wisd. xxviii. 15.

5. Hostility; state of opposition; act of opposition.

Duncan's horses
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would Make war with man. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To WAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To make war; to be in a state of hostility.

Was this a face,
To be expos'd against the warring winds? Shakspeare.
Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within? Shakspeare.
Make peace with God, for you must die, my lord. —
— Have you that holy feeling in your soul,
To counsel me to make my peace with God,
And are you yet to your own souls so blind,
That you will war with God by murdering me? Shakspeare.

He teacheth my hands to war. 2 Sam. xxii.

This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare. 1 Tim. i. 18.

He limited his forces, to proceed in aid of the Britons, but in no wise to war upon the French. Bacon, Hen. VII.

We seem ambitious God's whole work to undo;
With new diseases on ourselves we war,
And with new physick, a worse engine far. Donne.

His next design
Was all the Theban race in arms to join,
And war on Theseus. Dryden.

To the island of Delos, by being reckoned a sacred place, nations warring with one another resorted with their goods, and traded as in a neutral country. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To WAR.† v. a. To make war upon.

To them the same was render'd, to the end,
To war the Scot, and borders to defend. Daniel, Civ. War.

That small infantry

To WA'RBLE.† v. a. [werben, old Teutonick; wervelen, German; to twirl, or turn round. Dr. Johnson. — The old French language has werbler, parler à haute voix, réciter, discourir. Roquefort.]

1. To quaver any sound.

Fountains, and ye that warble as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs warbling tune his praise. Milton, P. L.

2. To cause to quaver.

Follow me as I sing,
And touch the warbled string. Milton, Arcades.

3. To utter musically.

She can thaw the numming spell,
If she be right invok'd with warbled song. Milton, Comus.

To WA'RBLE. v. n.

1. To be quavered.

Such strains ne'er warble in the linnet's throat. Gay.

2. To be uttered melodiously.

A plaining song, plain-singing voice requires,
For warbling notes from inward cheering flow. Sidney.
There birds resort, and in their kind, thy praise
Among the branches chant in warbling lays. Wotton.

3. To sing.

Creatures that liv'd and mov'd, and walk'd, or flew;
Birds on the branches warbling; all things smil'd. Milton, P. L.

She warbled in her throat,
And tun'd her voice to many a merry note,
But indistinct. Dryden.

A bard amid the joyous circle sings
High airs attemper'd to the vocal strings;
Whilst, warbling to the varied strain advance,
Two sprightly youths to form the bounding dance. Pope.

WA'RBLE.* n. s. A song.

I give you thanks for your warble, and wish you could sing yourself to rest. Gray, Lett. to West.

Every warble of the feather'd choir. Dyer.

WA'RBLER. n. s. [from warble.] A singer; a songster.

Hark! on ev'ry bough,
In lulling strains the feather'd warblers woo. Tickell.

WARD. A syllable much used as an affix in composition, as heavenward, with tendency to heaven; hitherward, this way; from peaꝛð, Saxon; it notes tendency to or from.

Before she could come to the arbour, she saw walking from her-ward, a man in shepherdish apparel. Sidney.

To WARD. v. a. [peaꝛðian, Saxon; waren, Dutch; garder, Fr.]

1. To guard; to watch.

He marched forth towards the castle wall,
Whose gates he found fast shut, ne living wight
To ward the same, nor answer comer's call. Spenser.

2. To defend; to protect.

Tell him it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers, bid him bury it. Shakspeare.

3. To fence off; to obstruct, or turn aside any thing mischievous. It is now used with off, less elegantly.

Not once the baron lift his armed hand
To strike the maid, but gazing on her eyes,
Where lordly Cupid seem'd in arms to stand,
No way to ward or shun her blows he tries. Fairfax.
Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again. Daniel.
Toxeus amaz'd, and with amazement slow,
Or to revenge, or ward the coming blow,
Stood doubting; and while doubting thus he stood,
Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood. Dryden.

The pointed javelin warded off his rage. Addison.

The provision of bread for food; cloathing to ward off the inclemency of the air, were to be first look'd after. Woodward.

It instructs the scholar in the various methods of warding off the force of objections, and of discovering and repelling the subtle tricks of sophisters. Watts on the Mind.

To WARD. v. n.

1. To be vigilant; to keep guard.

2. To act upon the defensive with a weapon.

So redoubling her blows, drove the stranger to no other shift than to ward and go back. Sidney.

Short crooked swords in closer fight they wear,
And on their warding arms light bucklers bear. Dryden.

WARD. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Watch; act of guarding.

Still when she slept, he kept both watch and ward. Spenser.

Sublime on these a tow'r of steel is rear'd;
And dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward:
Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryden.

2. Garrison; those who are intrusted to keep a place.

By reason of these two forts, though there be but small wards left in them, there are two good towns now grown, which are the greatest stay of both those two countries. Spenser.

The assieged castles ward
Their stedfast stonds did mightily maintain. Spenser.

3. Guard made by a weapon in fencing.

Thou know'st my old ward; here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Now, by proof it shall appear,
Whether thy horns are sharper, or my spear.
At this, I threw: for want of other ward,
He lifted up his hand, his front to guard. Dryden.

4. Fortress: strong hold.

She dwells securely on the excellency of her honour. Now could I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her from the ward of her purity, her reputation, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

5. [warda, law Lat.] District of a town.

Throughout the trembling city plac'd a guard,
Dealing an equal share to every ward. Dryden.

6. Custody; confinement.

That wretched creature being deprehended in that impiety, was held in ward. Hooker.

Stopt there was his too.vch'ment speech with speed,
And he sent close to ward from where he stood. Daniel.

7. The part of a lock, which, corresponding to the proper key, hinders any other from opening it.

In the key-hole turns
The intricate wards, and every bolt and bar. Milton, P. L.

As there are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in the making and contriving their wards, or guards. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

The keys, as well as the locks, were fitted ward to ward, by the same wisdom. Grew, Cosmol.

8. One in the hands of a guardian.

The king causeth bring up his wards, but bestoweth no more of their rents upon them than is useful. Drummond.

You know our father's ward,
The fair Moninia: is your heart at peace?
Is it so guarded that you could not love her? Otway.

Thy Violante's heart was ever thine,
Compell'd to wed, before she was my ward. Dryden.

When stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.

Titles of honour and privileges, the rich and the great can never deserve, unless they employ them for the protection of these, the true wards and children of God. Sprat.

9. The state of a child under a guardian.

I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection. Shakspeare.

Lewis the eleventh of France having much abated the greatness and power of the peers, would say, that he had brought the crown out of ward. Bacon.

10. Guardianship; right over orphans.

It is also inconvenient in Ireland, that the wards and marriages of gentlemen's children should be in the disposal of any of those lords. Spenser.

WA'RDEN. n. s. [waerden, Dutch.]

1. A keeper; a guardian.
2. A head officer.

The warden of apothecaries' hall. Garth.

3. Warden of the cinque ports.

A magistrate that has the jurisdiction of those havens in the east part of England, commonly called the cinque ports, or five havens, who has there all that jurisdiction which the admiral of England has in places not exempt. The reason why one magistrate should be assigned to these havens seems to be, because in respect of their situation, they formerly required a more vigilant care than other havens, being in greater danger of invasion by our enemies. Cowel.

4. [Pyrum volemum, Latin. I know not whence denominated.] A large pear.

Nor must all shoots of pears alike be set,
Crustumian, Syrian pears, and wardens great. May, Virg.

Ox-cheek when hot, and wardens bak'd some cry. King.

WA'RDENSHIP.* n. s. [from warden.] Office of a warden or guardian.

Had this castle actually existed as a strong western garrison under the wardenship of our hero Ella, &c. Warton, Rowley Enq. p. 64.

WA'RDER. n. s. [from ward.]

1. A keeper; a guard.

Upon those gates with force he fiercely flew,
And rending them in pieces, felly slew
Those warders strange, and all that else he met. Spenser.

Where be these warders, that they wait not here?
Open the gates. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Though bladed corn be lodg'd and trees blown down,
Though castles topple on their warders heads. Shakspeare.

The warders of the gate but scarce maintain
Th' unequal combat, and resist in vain. Dryden.

2. A truncheon by which an officer of arms forbade fight.

Then, then, when there was nothing could have staid
My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
O, when the king did throw his warder down,
His own life hung upon the staff he threw. Shakspeare.

WA'RDMOTE. n. s. [peaꞃꝺ and moꞇ, or ȝemoꞇ, Saxon; wardemotus, low Latin.] A meeting; a court held in each ward or district in London for the direction of their affairs.

WA'RDROBE. n. s. [garderobe, Fr. garderoba, low Latin.] A room where clothes are kept.

The third had of their wardrobe custody,
In which were not rich tires nor garments gay,
The plumes of pride, and wings of vanity,
But clothes meet to keep keen cold away. Spenser.

I will kill all his coats,
I'll murder all his wardrobe piece by piece
Until I meet the king. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Behold!
What from his wardrobe her belov'd allows,
To deck the wedding-day of his unspotted spouse. Dryden.

It would not be an impertinent design to make a kind of an old Roman wardrobe, where you should see togas and tunicas, the chlamys and trabea, and all the different vests and ornaments so often mentioned in the Greek and Roman authors. Addison.

WA'RDSHIP. n. s. [from ward.]

1. Guardianship.

By reason of the tenures in chief revived, the sums for respect of homage be encreased, and the profits of wardships cannot but be much advanced. Bacon.

2. Pupillage; state of being under ward.

The houses sued out their livery, and redeemed themselves from the wardship of tumults. King Charles.

WARE. The preterite of wear, more frequent wore.

A certain man — ware no clothes. St. Luke, viii. 27.

WARE. adj. [For this we commonly say aware.]

1. Being in expectation of; being provided against.

The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not ware of him. St. Matth. xxiv. 50.

2. Cautious; wary.

What man so wise, what earthly wit so ware,
As to descry the crafty cunning train
By which deceit doth mask in vizor fair. Spenser.

Bid her well be ware and still erect. Milton, P. L.

To WARE. v. n. To take heed of; to beware.

A shuffled, sullen, and uncertain light
That dances through the clouds, and shuts again,
Then ware a rising tempest on the main. Dryden.

WARE. n. s. [ƿaɲn, Saxon; waerc, Dutch; wara, Swedish.] Commonly something to be sold.

Let us, like merchants, shew our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, they'll sell. Shakspeare.

If the people bring ware or any victuals to sell, that we would not buy it. Nehem. x. 31.

I know thou whole art but a shop
Of toys and trifles, traps and snares,
To take the weak, and make them stop;
Yet art thou falser than thy wares. B. Jonson.

Why should my black thy love impair?
Let the dark shop commend the ware. Cleaveland.

London that vents of false ware so much store,
In no ware deceives us more. Cowley.

He turns himself to other wares which he finds your markets take off. Locke.

WA'REFUL. adj. [ware and full.] Cautious; timorously prudent.

WA'REFULNESS. n. s. [from wareful.] Cautiousness. Obsolete.

With pretence from Strephon her to guard,
He met her full; but full of warefulness. Sidney.

WA'REHOUSE. n. s. [ware and house.] A storehouse of merchandise.

His understanding is only the warehouse of other men's lumber, I mean false and unconcluding reasonings rather than a repository of truth for his own use. Locke.

She had never more ships at sea, greater quantities of merchandise in her warehouses than at present. Addison.

She the big warehouse built,
Rais'd the strong crane. Thomson, Autumn.

WA'RELESS.† adj. [from ware.]

1. Uncautious; unwary.

So was he justly damned by the doome
Of his owne mouth, that spake so wareless word,
To be her thrall, and service her afford. Spenser, F. Q. v. v. 17.

Such force and vertue hath this dolefull plaint,
Set forth with sighes and teares of crocodile,
Who seemes in sight as simple as a saint,
Hath laid a bait the warelesse to beguile.
Mir. for Mag. p. 464.

2. Suffered unawares, or contrary to expectation.

That when he wak'd out of his warelesse paine,
He found himselfe unwist so ill bestad
That lim he could not wag. Spenser, F. Q. v. i. 22.

WA'RELY. adv. [from ware.] Warily; cautiously; timorously.

They bound him hand and foot with iron chains,
And with continual watch did warely keep. Spenser.

WA'RFARE. n. s. [war and fare.] Military service; military life; state of contest and solicitude.

In the wilderness
He shall first lay down the rudiments
Of his great warfare, ere I send him forth
To conquer sin and death. Milton, P. R.

Faithful hath been your warfare, and of God,
Accepted, fearless in his righteous cause. Milton, P. L.

Tully, when he read the Tactics, was thinking on the bar which was his field of battle: the knowledge of warfare is thrown away on a general who does not make use of what he knows. Dryden.

The state of Christians, even when they are not actually persecuted, is a perpetual state of warfare and voluntary sufferings. Atterbury, Serm.

The Scripture has directed us to refer these miscarriages in our Christian warfare to the power of three enemies. Rogers.

To WA'RFARE. v. n. [from the noun.] To lead a military life.

That was the only amulet in that credulous warfaring age to escape dangers in battles. Camden, Rem.

WA'RHABLE. adj. [war and habile; from habilis, Lat.] or able.] Military; fit for war.

The weary Britons, whose warhable youth
Was by Maximilian lately led away,
With wretched miseries and woeful ruth,
Were to those pagans made an open prey. Spenser.

WA'RILY. adv. [from wary.] Cautiously; with timorous prudence; with wise forethought.

The charge thereof unto a courteous sprite
Commended was, who thereby did attend,
And warily awaited day and night,
From other covetous fiends it to defend. Spenser.

The change of laws, especially concerning matters of religion, must be warily proceeded in. Hooker.

So rich a prize could not so warily be fenced, but that Portugals, French, English, and now of late the Low-countrymen have laid in their own barns part of the Spaniards' harvest. Heylin.

They searched diligently and concluded warily. Sprat.

It will concern a man to treat conscience awfully and warily, by still observing what it commands, but especially what it forbids. South, Serm.

WA'RINESS. n. s. [from wary.] Caution; prudent forethought; timorous scrupulousness.

For your own conscience he gives innocence,
But for your fame a discreet wariness. Donne.

It will deserve our special care and wariness to deliver our thoughts in this manner. Hammond.

To determine what are little things in religion, great wariness is to be used. Sprat, Serm.

The path was so very slippery, the shade so exceeding gloomy, and the whole wood so full of echoes, that they were forced to march with the greatest wariness, circumspection, and silence. Addison, Freeholder.

Most men have so much of ill-nature, or of wariness, as not to sooth the vanity of the ambitious man. Addison.

I look upon it to be a most clear truth; and expressed it with more wariness and reserve than was necessary. Atterbury.

WARK. n. s. [anciently used for work; whence bulwark.] Building.

Thou findest fault where any's to be found,
And buildest strong wark upon a weak ground. Spenser.

WA'RLIKE. adj. [war and like.]

1. Fit for war; disposed to war.

She using so strange, and yet so well succeeding a temper, made her people by peace warlike. Sidney.

All ready at appoint, was setting forth. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

When a warlike state grows soft and effeminate, they may be sure of a war. Bacon.

O imprudent Gauls,
Relying on false hopes, thus to incense
The warlike English! Philips.

2. Military; relating to war.

The great arch-angel from his warlike toil

WA'RLIKENESS.* n. s. [from warlike.] Warlike disposition or character.

Braveness of mind, and warlikeness.
Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion, V. i. b.

WA'RLING.† n. s. [from war.] This word is I believe only found in the following adage, and seems to mean, one often quarrelled with. Dr. Johnson. — It is from wear or weary, as Butler in his Engl. Grammar of 1633 has pointed out, and as Mr. Malone also has observed; wearling, by the sound being more upon the a than e, becoming warling, like as dearling, darling: Hence Butler adds the proverb given by Camden, and Mr. Malone accordingly defines warling, or wearling, one of whom a young man is weary.

Better be an old man's darling than a young man's warling. Camden, Rem.

WA'RLOCK. } WA'RLUCK. } n. s. [vardlookr, Icelandick, a charm; peplog, Saxon, an evil spirit. This etymology was communicated by Mr. Wise.] A male witch; a wizard.

Warlock in Scotland is applied to a man whom the vulgar suppose to be conversant with spirits, as a woman who carries on the same commerce is called a witch: he is supposed to have the invulnerable quality which Dryden mentions, who did not understand the word.

He was no warluck, as the Scots commonly call such men who they say are iron free or lead free. Dryden.

WARM. adj. [warm, Gothick; peapm, Sax. warm, Dutch.]

1. Not cold, though not hot; heated to a small degree.

He stretched himself upon the child, and the flesh of the child waxed warm. 2 Kings, iv. 34.

Main ocean flow'd, not idle, but with warm
Prolifick humour, softening all her globe. Milton, P. L.

We envy not the warmer clime that lies
In ten degrees of more indulgent skies. Addison.

2. Zealous; ardent.

I never thought myself so warm in any party's cause, as to deserve their money. Pope.

Each warm wish springs mutual from the heart. Pope.

Scaliger in his poeticks is very warm against it. Broome.

3. Habitually passionate; ardent; keen.

4. Violent; furious; vehement.

Welcome day-light; we shall have warm work on't:
The Moor will 'gage
His utmost forces on his next assault,
To win a queen and kingdom. Dryden, Span. Friar.

5. Busy in action; heated with action.

I hate the ling'ring summons to attend,
Death all at once would be a nobler end;
Fate is unkind: methinks a general
Should warm, and at the head of armies fall. Dryden.

6. Fanciful; enthusiastick.

If there be a sober and a wise man, what difference will there be between his knowledge and that of the most extravagant fancy in the world? If there be any difference between them, the advantage will be on the warm-headed man's side, as having the more ideas, and the more lively. Locke.

7. Vigorous; sprightly.

Now warm in youth, now with'ring in thy bloom,
Lost in a convent's solitary gloom. Pope.

To WARM. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To free from cold; to heat in a gentle degree.

It shall be for a man to burn, for he shall take thereof and warm himself. Isa. xliv. 15.

The mounted sun
Shot down direct his fervid rays to warm
Earth's inmost womb. Milton, P. L.

These soft fires with kindly heat,
Of various influence, foment and warm. Milton, P. L.

2. To heat mentally; to make vehement.

The action of Homer being more full of vigour than that of Virgil, is more pleasing to the reader: one warms you by degrees, the other sets you on fire all at once, and never intermits his heat. Dryden.

To WARM. v. n. To grow less cold.

There shall not be a coal to warm at, nor fire to sit before it. Isa. xlvii. 14.

WA'RMINGPAN.† n. s. [warm and pan.] A covered brass pan for warming a bed by means of hot coals.

The idle story of the Pretender's having been introduced in a warming-pan into the Queen's bed has been much more prejudicial to the cause of Jacobitism, than all that Mr. Locke and others have written. Ld. Chesterfield.

WA'RMINGSTONE. n. s. [warm and stone.] To stones add the warming-stone, digged in Cornwall, which being well heated at the fire retains warmth a great while, and hath been found to give ease in the internal hæmorrhoids. Ray.

WA'RMLY. adv. [from warm.]

1. With gentle heat.

There the warming sun first warmly smote
The open field. Milton, P. L.

2. Eagerly; ardently.

Now I have two right honest wives
One to Atrides I will send,
And t'other to my Trojan friend;
Each prince shall thus with honour have
What both so warmly seem to crave. Prior.

The ancients expect you should do them right in the account you intend to write of their characters: I hope you think more warmly than ever of that design. Pope.

WA'RMNESS.† } WARMTH. } n. s. [from warm.]

1. Gentle heat.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol; from the loathed warmth whereof deliver me. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun encreasing than the hot herbs have; as a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The Creator is willing mankind should serve themselves of all his creatures' various excellencies, in their strength, weight, light, sweetness, warmness. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 99.

He vital virtue infus'd, and vital warmth,
Throughout the fluid mass. Milton, P. L.

Here kindly warmth their mounting juice ferments
To nobler tastes, and more exalted scents. Addison.

2. Zeal; passion; fervour of mind.

What warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come? Shakspeare.

Our duties towards God and man, we should perform with that unfeigned integrity which belongs to Christian piety; with that temper and sobriety which becomes Christian prudence and charity; with that warmth and affection which agrees with Christian zeal. Sprat, Serm.

Your opinion that it is entirely to be neglected, would have been my own, had it been my own case; but I felt more warmth here than I did when first I saw his book against myself. Pope.

The best patriots, by seeing with what warmth and zeal the smallest corruptions are defended, have been wearied into silence. Davenant.

3. Fancifulness; enthusiasm.

The same warmth of head disposes men to both. Temple.

To WARN.† v. a. [peapnian, Saxon; waernen, Dutch; warna, Swedish; varna, Icelandick.]

1. To caution against any fault or danger; to give previous notice of ill.

What, do'st thou scorn me for my gentle counsel?
And sooth the devil that I warn thee from? Shakspeare.

The hand can hardly lift up itself high enough to strike, but it must be seen; so that it warns, while it threatens; but a false insidious tongue may whisper a lie so close and low, that though you have ears to hear, yet you shall not hear. South.

Juturna warns the Daunian chief,
Of Lausus' danger, urging swift relief. Dryden.

He had chidden the rebellious winds for obeying the command of their usurping master: he had warned them from the seas; he had beaten down the billows. Dryden.

If we consider the mistakes in men's disputes and notions, how great a part is owing to words, and their uncertain or mistaken significations; this we are the more carefully to be warned of, because the arts of improving it have been made the business of men's study. Locke.

The father, whilst he warn'd his erring son,
The sad examples which he ought to shun
Describ'd. Prior.

When first young Maro sung of kings and wars,
Ere warning Phœbus touch'd his trembling ears,
Perhaps he seem'd above the criticks law,
And but from nature's fountains scorn'd to draw. Pope.

2. To admonish of any duty to be performed, or practice or place to be avoided or forsaken.

Cornelius was warned from God by an holy angel to send for thee. Acts, x. 22.

3. To inform previously of good or bad.

He wonders to what end you have assembled
Such troops of citizens to come to him,
His grace not being warn'd thereof before. Shakspeare.

He charg'd the soldiers with preventing care,
Their flags to follow, and their arms prepare,
Warn'd of the ensuing fight, and bade 'em hope the war. Dryden, Æn.

Man, who knows not hearts, should make examples,
Which like a warning-piece must be shot off,
To fright the rest from crimes. Dryden, Span. Friar.

4. Milton put no preposition before the thing.

Our first parents had been warn'd
The coming of their secret foe, and 'scap'd
His mortal snare. Milton, P. L.

5. To keep off; to ward off.

Yet can they not warne death from wretched wight. Spenser, F. Q.

WA'RNER.* n. s. [from warn.] An admonisher. Huloet.

WA'RNING. n. s. [from warn.]

1. Caution against faults or dangers; previous notice of ill.

I will thank the Lord for giving me warning in the night. Psalms.

He groaning from the bottom of his breast,
This warning in these mournful words exprest. Dryden.

Here wretched Phlegias warns the world with cries,
Could warning make the world more just or wise. Dryden.

You have fairer warning than others who are unexpectedly cut off, and so have a better opportunity, as well as greater engagements to provide for your latter end. Wake.

A true and plain relation of my misfortunes may be of use and warning to credulous maids, never to put too much trust in deceitful men. Swift, Story of the Injured Lady.

2. Previous notice: in a sense indifferent.

Suppose he have a more leisurely death, that some disease give him warning of its approach, yet perhaps he will not understand that warning, but will still flatter himself, as very often sick people do, with hopes of life to the last. Wh. Duty of Man.

Death called up an old man, and bade him come; the man excused himself, that it was a great journey to take upon so short a warning. L'Estrange.

I saw with some disdain, more nonsense than either I or as bad a poet could have crammed into it at a month's warning; in which time it was wholly written. Dryden.

WARP. n. s. [peapp, Saxon; werp, Dutch.] That order of thread in a thing woven that crosses the woof.

The placing of the tangible parts in length or transverse, as it is in the warp and the woof of texture, more inward or more outward. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To WARP.† v. n. [peoppan, Saxon; werpen, Dutch, to throw; whence we sometimes say, the work casts.]

1. To change from the true situation by intestine motion; to change the position of one part to another.

This fellow will but join you together as they join wainscot, then one of you will prove a shrunk-pannel, and like green timber warp. Shakespeare, As You Like It.

They clamp one piece of wood to the end of another piece, to keep it from casting or warping. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

2. To lose its proper course or direction.

There's our commission
From which we would not have you warp. Shakspeare.

This is strange! methinks
My favour here begins to warp. Shakspeare.

All attest this doctrine, that the pope can give away the right of any sovereign, if he shall never so little warp. Dryden.

3. To work itself forward. A sea term. Hume.

The potent rod
Of Amram's son in Egypt's evil day
Wav'd round the coast, up call'd a pitchy cloud
Of locusts, warping on the eastern wind,
That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung
Like night. Milton, P. L.

To WARP. v. a.

1. To contract; to shrivel.

2. To turn aside from the true direction.

This first avow'd, nor folly warp'd my mind;
Nor the frail texture of the female kind
Betray'd my virtue. Dryden.

Not foreign or domestick treachery
Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree. Dryden.

A great argument of the goodness of his cause, which required in its defender zeal, to a degree of warmth able to warp the sacred rule of the word of God. Locke.

I have no private considerations to warp me in this controversy, since my first entering upon it. Addison.

Not warp'd by passion, aw'd by rumour,
Nor grave through pride, or gay through folly;
An equal mixture of good humour,
And sensible soft melancholy. Swift.

A constant watchfulness against all those prejudices that might warp the judgment aside from truth. Watts.

Aristotle's moral, rhetorical, and political writings, in which his excellent judgment is very little warped by logical subtleties, are far the most useful part of his philosophy. Beattie.

3. It is used by Shakspeare to express the effect of frost.

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
Thou do'st not bite so nigh
As benefits forgot:
Though thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp
As friends remember'd not. Shakspeare, As You Like It.

WA'RPING.* n. s. [from warp.] Act of turning aside from the true direction.

The heart upright without any sinful warpings. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 36.

This we should do as directly as may be, with as little warping and declension towards the creature as is possible. Norris.

WARPROO'F.* n. s. Valour known by proof. Mason.

On, on, you noblest English,
Whose blood is fet from fathers of warproof. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

To WA'RRANT.† v. n. [garantir, French; from the Sax. papian, to defend. Lye.]

1. To support or maintain; to attest.

She needed not disdain any service, though never so mean, which was warranted by the sacred name of father. Sidney.

He that readeth unto us the Scriptures delivereth all the mysteries of faith, and not any thing amongst them all more than the mouth of the Lord doth warrant. Hooker.

If this internal light be conformable to the principles of reason, or to the word of God, which is attested revelation, reason warrants it, and we may safely receive it for true. Locke.

2. To give authority.

Now we'll together, and the chance of goodness
Be like our warranted quarrel. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. To justify.

How can any one warrant himself in the use of those things against such suspicions, but in the trust he has in the common honesty and truth of men in general? South.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants and that wisdom guides;
All else is tow'ring frenzy and distraction. Addison.

4. To exempt; to privilege; to secure.

If my coming, whom, she said, he feared, as soon as he knew me by the armour, had not warranted her from that near approaching cruelty. Sidney.

These thoughts cannot, in this your loneliness, warrant you from suspicion in others, nor defend you from melancholy in yourself. Sidney.

I'll warrant him from drowning. Shakspeare, Tempest.

In a place
Less warranted than this, or less secure,
I cannot be, that I should fear to change it. Milton, Comus.

5. To declare upon surety.

What a galled neck have we here! Look ye, mine's as smooth as silk, I warrant ye. L'Estrange.

The Moors king
Is safe enough, I warrant him for one. Dryden, Span. Friar.

WA'RRANT. n. s. [from the verb.]

A writ conferring some right or authority.

Are you now going to dispatch this deed?
—We are, my lord, and come to have the warrant,
That we may be admitted where he is. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

He sent him a warrant for one thousand pounds a year pension for his life. Clarendon.

There was a damn'd design, cries one, no doubt;
For warrants are already issued out. Dryden, Juv.

3. A secure inviolable grant.

His promise is our plain warrant, that in his name what we ask we shall receive. Hooker.

4. A justificatory commission.

Is this a warrant sufficient for any man's conscience to build such proceedings upon, as have been and are put in use for the establishment of that cause? Hooker.

When at any time they either wilfully break any commandment, or ignorantly mistake it, that is no warrant for us to do so likewise. Kettlewell.

5. Attestation.

The place of Paradise might be seen unto Moses, and unto the prophets who succeeded him; both which I take for my warrant to guide me in this discovery. Ralegh.

His warrant does the Christian faith defend;
On that relying, all their quarrels end. Waller.

The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and therefore, that this might so enter as not to intrude, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of Omnipotence. South.

6. Right; legality. Obsolete.

I attach thee
For an abuser of the world, a practicer
Of arts inhibited and out of warrant. Shakspeare, Othello.

Therefore to horse,
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But shift away: there's warrant in that theft,
Which steals itself when there's no mercy left. Shakspeare.

WA'RRANTABLE. adj. [from warrant.] Justifiable; defensible.

To purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know. Brown.

His meals are coarse and short, his employment warrantable, his sleep certain and refreshing. South.

If I can mend my condition by any warrantable industry, the way is fair and open; and that's a privilege every reasonable creature has in his commission. L'Estrange.

WA'RRANTABLENESS.† n. s. [from warrantable.] Justifiableness.

By the foil thereof you may see the nobleness of my desire to you, and the warrantableness of your favour to me. Sidney.

The warrantableness of this practice may be inferred from a parity of reason. Barrow, Serm. i. 181.

WA'RRANTABLY. adv. [from warrantable.] Justifiably.

The faith which God requires is only this, that he will certainly reward all those that believe in him, and obey his commandments; but for the particular application of this faith to ourselves, that deserves no more of our assent, nor can indeed warrantably have it, than what is founded upon the serious consideration of our own performances. Wake.

WA'RRANTER. n. s. [from warrant.]

1. One who gives authority.
2. One who gives security.

WA'RRANTISE. n. s. [warrantiso, law Latin; from warrant.] Authority; security.

WA'RRANTY. n. s. [warrantia, law Latin; garantie, garant, French.]

1. [In the common law.] A promise made in a deed by one man unto another for himself and his heirs, to secure him and his heirs against all men, for the enjoying of any thing agreed of between them. Cowel.

2. Authority; justificatory mandate.

Her obsequies have been so far enlarg'd
As we have warranty: her death was doubtful;
And but that great command o'ersways the order,
She should in ground unsanctify'd have lodg'd
Till the last trump. Shakspeare.

In the use of those epithets we have the warranty and consent of all the churches, since they ever had a liturgy. Bp. Taylor.

If they disobey any precept, that is no excuse to us, nor gives us any warranty, for company's sake, to disobey likewise. Kettlewell.

3. Security.

Every one cannot distinguish between fine and mixed silver: those who have had the care and government of politick societies, introduced coinage as a remedy: the stamp was a warranty of the publick, that under such a denomination they should receive a piece of such a weight and fineness. Locke.

To WA'RRAY, v. a. [from war; or from guerroyer, old Fr.] To make war upon. A word very elegant and expressive, though obsolete.

But Ebranc salved both their infancies
With noble deeds, and warrayd on Brunchild
In Hainault, where yet of his victories
Brave monuments remain, which yet that land envys. Spenser.

Of these a mighty people shortly grew,
And puissant kings, which all the world warraid,
And to themselves all nations did subdue. Spenser.

This continual, cruel, civil war,
The which myself against myself do make,
Whilst my weak powers of passions warraid are,
No skill can stint, nor reason can aslake. Spenser.

Six years were run since first in martial guise
The Christian lords warraid the eastern land. Fairfax.

WARRE.† adj. [pæpp, Saxon.] Worse. Still a provincial term: war-and-war, worse and worse. Grose.

They say the world is warre than it wont,
All for her shepherds is beastly and bloont:
Others saine, but how truly I note,
All for they holden shame of their cote. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

WA'RREN. n. s. [waerande, Dutch; guerenne, Fr.]

A kind of park for rabbits.

I found him here, as melancholy as a lodge in a warren. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

WA'TER.† n. s. [waeter, Dutch; pæteꝛ, Saxon; from the M. Goth. wate, aqua.]

1. Sir Isaac Newton defines water, when pure, to be a very fluid salt, volatile, and void of all savour or taste; and it seems to consist of small, smooth, hard, porous, spherical particles, of equal diameters, and of equal specifick gravities, as Dr. Cheyne observes; and also that there are between them spaces so large, and ranged in such a manner, as to be pervious on all sides. Their smoothness accounts for their sliding easily over one another's surfaces: their sphericity keeps them also from touching one another in more points than one; and by both these their friction, in sliding over one another, is rendered the least possible. Their hardness accounts for the incompressibility of water, when it is free from the intermixture of air. The porosity of water is so very great, that there is at least forty times as much space as matter in it; for water is nineteen times specifically lighter than gold, and consequently rarer in the same proportion. Quincy.

My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griefs,
My mercy dry'd their water-flowing tears.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Your water is a sore decayer of your whoreson dead body.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

The sweet manner of it forc'd
Those waters from me, which I would have stopp'd,
But I had not so much of man in me;
But all my mother came into mine eyes,
And gave me up to tears. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Men's evil manners live in brass, their virtues
We write in water. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Those healths will make thee and thy state look ill, Timon: here's that which is too weak to be a sinner, honest water, which ne'er left man i' th' mire. Shakspeare, Timon.

Water is the chief ingredient in all the animal fluids and solids; for a dry bone, distilled, affords a great quantity of insipid water: therefore water seems to be proper drink for every animal. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Yet for the fish he bears, 'tis not accounted bad. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 25.

WEB.† n. s. [pebba, Saxon; from webjan, M. Goth. to weave.]

1. Texture; any thing woven.

Penelope, for her Ulysses' sake,
Devis'd a web her wooers to deceive;
In which the work that she all day did make,
The same at night she did again unreave. Spenser.

Staid at gate,
And heard within, the goddesse elevate
A voice divine, as at her web she wrought,
Subtle, and glorious, and past earthly thought. Chapman.

Spiders touch'd, seek their web's inmost part. Davies.

By day the web and loom,
And homely houshold task, shall be her doom. Dryden.

The fates, when they this happy web have spun,
Shall bless the sacred clue, and bid it smoothly run. Dryden.

2. Some part of a sword. Obsolete. Dr. Johnson.— It seems to have been the blade. Mason.

The sword, whereof the web was steel;
Pommel, rich stone; hilt, gold, approv'd by touch. Fairfax.

3. A kind of dusky film that hinders the sight; suffusion.

This is the foul flibertigibbet; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hairlip. Shakspeare.

WE'BBED. adj. [from web.] Joined by a film.

Such as are whole-footed, or whose toes are webbed together, their legs are generally short, the most convenient size for swimming. Derham, Phys. Theol.

WE'BFOOTED. adj. [web and foot.] Palmipede; having films between the toes.

Webfooted fowls do not live constantly upon the land, nor fear to enter the water. Ray on the Creation.

WE'BSTER.† n. s. [pebyꞇꞃe, Sax. a woman-weaver.] A weaver. Still a northern term. The old word is also webber, Pr. Parv. "a maker of cloth."

After local names, the most in number have been derived from occupations; as Taylor, Webster, Wheeler. Camden.

To WED.† v. a. [pebbian, Saxon; withan, M. Goth. conjungere, marem nempè et fœminam, St. Mark, ix. 10. Ulphil.; wetten, Germ. dyweddio, Cambr. conjungere. Affine Su. Goth. wad, sponsio, a pledge.

Serenius. The Sax. peb is the same, and Junius refers to it our wed; which Dr. Jamieson supports by observing, "that it was customary to espouse by means of a wed or pledge." Thus wed for pledge, in old Engl. "And thus his truth he laith to wedde." Gower, Conf. Am. B. 1.]

1. To marry; to take for husband or wife.

If one by one you wedded all the world,
Or, from the all that are, took something good
To make a perfect woman; she you kill'd
Would be unparallel'd. Shakspeare.

Never did thy beauty, since the day
I saw thee first, and wedded thee, adorn'd
With all perfection, so inflame my senses. Milton, P. L.

Cloe, blind to wit and worth,
Weds the rich dullness of some son of earth. Pope.

2. To join in marriage.

In Syracusa was I born, and wed
Unto a woman happy but for me. Shakspeare.

Then I shall be no more;
And Adam, wedded to another Eve,
Shall live with her. Milton, P. L.

The woman in us still prosecutes a deceit like that begun in the garden; and our understandings are wedded to an Eve, as fatal as the mother of their miseries. Glanville.

3. To unite for ever.

Affliction is enamour'd of thy parts,
And thou art wedded to calamity. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

4. To take for ever.

Though the principal men of the house of commons were again elected to serve in this parliament, yet they were far from wedding the war, or taking themselves to be concerned to make good any declaration made by the former. Clarendon.

They positively and concernedly wedded his cause. Clarendon.

5. To unite by love or fondness.

Men are wedded to their lusts, and resolved upon a wicked course; and so it becomes their interest to wish there were no God. Tillotson, Serm.

To WED. v. n. To contract matrimony.

When I shall wed,
That lord whose hand shall take my plight, shall carry
Half my love with him, half my care and duty. Shakspeare.

To love, to wed,
For Hymen's rites, and for the marriage bed,
You were ordain'd. Suckling.

Nor took I Guiscard, by blind fancy led,
Or hasty choice as many women wed;
But with deliberate care. Dryden.

WE'DDED.* adj. [from wed.] Belonging to matrimony.

Solomon, among his gravest proverbs, countenances a kind of ravishment and erring fondness in the entertainment of wedded leisures. Milton, Tetrachordon.

WE'DDING.† n. s. [pebbunȝ, Saxon.] Marriage; nuptials; the nuptial ceremony.

Come, away!
For you shall hence upon your wedding-day. Shakspeare.
I will dance and eat plums at your wedding. Shakspeare.
Let her beauty be her wedding-dower;
For me and my possessions she esteems not. Shakspeare.

When my son was entered into his wedding-chamber, he fell down and died. 2 Esdr. x. 1.

These three country bills agree, that each wedding produces four children. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

His friends were invited to come and make merry with him, and this was to be the wedding-feast. L'Estrange.

If she affirmed herself a virgin, she must on her wedding day, and in her wedding-clothes, perform the ceremony of going alone into the den, and stay an hour with the lion. Swift.

A woman seldom asks advice before she has bought her wedding-clothes. Spectator.

WEDGE. n. s. [vgge, Danish; wegge, Dutch.]

1. A body, which having a sharp edge, continually growing thicker, is used to cleave timber; one of the mechanical powers.

A barbarous troop of clownish fone,
The honour of these noble bows down threw;
Under the wedge I heard the trunk to groan. Spenser.

The fifth mechanical faculty is the wedge used in the cleaving of wood. Wilkins, Mathem. Magick.

He left his wedge within the cloven oak. Dryden, Æn.

The oak let many a heavy groan, when he was cleft with a wedge of his own timber. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

2. A mass of metal.

As sparkles from the anvil used to fly,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are swaid. Spenser.

When I saw a goodly Babylonish garment, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight, then I coveted them. Josh. vii.

3. Any thing in the form of a wedge.

In warlike musters they appear,
In rhombs, and wedges, and half moons, and wings. Milton, P. L.

To WEDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cleave with a wedge.

My heart
As wedged with a sigh would rive in twain,
Lest Hector, or my father, should perceive me. Shakspeare.

2. To drive as a wedge is driven.

Where have you been broiling? —
— Among the crowd i' the abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

3. To force as a wedge forces.

Part
In common, rang'd in figure, wedge their way;
Intelligent of seasons. Milton, P. L.

4. To fasten by wedges.

Wedge on the keenest scythes,
And give us steeds that snort against the foe. A. Philips.

5. To fix as a wedge.

Your wit will not so soon out as another man's will; it is strongly wedged up in a blockhead. Shakspeare.

Sergesthus in the centaur soon he pass'd,
Wedg'd in the rocky shoals and sticking fast. Dryden.

What impulse can be propagated from one particle, entomb'd and wedged in the very center of the earth, to another in the center of Saturn. Bentley, Serm.

WE'DLOCK.† n. s. [peb and lac, Sax. marriage and gift. Dr. Johnson. — Sax. peb-lac, pignus. Others from pebbian, to marry, and loc, Sax. a fastening.] Marriage; matrimony.

She doth stray about
By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays
For happy wedlock-hours. Shakspeare.

Sirrah, your brother is legitimate:
Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him;
And if she did play false, the fault was her's. Shakspeare.

Can wedlock know so great a curse,
As putting husbands out to nurse? Cleaveland.

He his happiest choice too late,
Shall meet already link'd, and wedlock-bound
To a fell adversary. Milton, P. L.

May not a prison or a grave,
Like wedlock, honour's title have? Denham.

One thought the sex's prime felicity
Was from the bonds of wedlock to be free:
And uncontroll'd to give account to none. Dryden.

A man determined about the fiftieth year of his age to enter upon wedlock. Addison.

WE'DNESDAY. n. s. [pobenrbæȝ, Saxon; odensday, Swedish; woensday, Dutch; wensday, Icelandick.] The fourth day of the week, so named by the Gothick nations from Woden or Odin.

Where is the honour of him that died on wednesday? Shakspeare.

The offices of prayer he had in his church upon the sundaies, and festivals, and their eves, as also wednesdaies and fridaies. Fell.

WEE.† adj. [weinigh, Teut. little; wenig, Germ. Lye thinks it an abbreviation of the Sax. hpene, few.] Little; small: whence the word weasle or weesel is used for little; as a weesel face. In Scotland and the north of England, it denotes small or little; as, wee ane, a little one, or child; a wee bit, a little bit.

Does he not wear a great round beard, like a glover's paring knife?—No, forsooth; he hath but a little wee face with a little yellow beard. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

WE'ECHELM. n. s. [This is often written witch elm.] A species of elm.

A cion of a weechelm grafted upon an ordinary elm, will put forth leaves as broad as the brim of a hat. Bacon.

WEED. n. s. [peoð, Saxon, tares.]

1. An herb noxious or useless.

If he had an immoderate ambition; which is a weed, if it be a weed, apt to grow in the best soils, it doth not appear that it was in his nature. Clarendon.

He wand'ring feeds
On slowly growing herbs and ranker weeds. Sandys.

Too much manuring fill'd that field with weeds,
While sects, like locusts, did destroy the seeds. Denham.

Stinking weeds and poisonous plants have their use. More.

When they are cut, let them lie, if weedy, to kill the weeds. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Their virtue, like their Tyber's flood,
Rolling, its course design'd the country's good;
But oft the torrent's too impetuous speed,
From the low earth tore some polluting weed;
And with the blood of Jove there always ran
Some viler part, some tincture of the man. Prior.

If they are often seen to lose that little religion they were taught in their youth, 'tis no more to be wondered at, than to see a little flower choked and killed amongst rank weeds. Law.

2. [pæða, Saxon; waed, Dutch.] A garment; clothes; habit; dress. Now scarce in use, except in widow's weeds, the mourning dress of a widow.

My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears. Sidney.

Neither is it any man's business to cloath all his servants with one weed; nor their's to cloath themselves so, if left to their own judgement. Hooker.

They meet upon the way
An aged sire in long black weeds yclad;
His feet all bare, his beard all hoary gray,
And by his belt his book he hanging had. Spenser.

Livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears, so called as it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure. Spenser.

The snake throws her enamelled skin,
Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in. Shakspeare.

Throngs of knights and barons bold,
In weeds of peace high triumphs hold,
With store of ladies. Milton, L'All.

Lately your fair hand in woman's weed
Wrapp'd my glad head. Waller.

3. It is used by Chapman for the upper garment.

The morning in her throne of gold,
Survaid the vast world, by whose orient light,
The nymph adorn'd me with attires as bright:
Her own hands putting on both shirt and weede. Chapman.

To WEED. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rid of noxious plants.

When you sow the berries of bays, weed not the borders for the first half year; for the weed giveth them shade. Bacon.

Your seedlings having stood till June, bestow a weeding or a slight howing upon them. Mortimer.

2. To take away as noxious plants.

Oh Marcius,
Each word thou'st spoke hath weeded from my heart
A root of ancient envy! Shakspeare, Coriol.

Sarcasms, contumelies, and invectives, fill so many pages of our controversial writings, that, were those weeded out, many volumes would be reduced to a more moderate bulk and temper. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

3. To free from any thing hurtful or offensive.

He weeded the kingdom of such as were devoted to Elaiana, and manumized it from that most dangerous confederacy. Howell, Voc. For.

4. To root out vice.

Wise fathers be not as well aware in weeding from their children ill things, as they were before in grafting in them learning. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

One by one, as they appeared, they might all be weeded out, without any signs that ever they had been there. Locke.

WE'EDER. n. s. [from weed.] One that takes away any thing noxious.

A weeder out of his proud adversaries,
A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

WE'EDERY.* n. s. [from weed.] Weeds.

Hard by there was a place all cover'd o'er
With stinging nettles, and such weedery.
More, Life of the Soul, ii. 141.

WE'EDHOOK.† } n. s. [weed and hook.] A hook
WE'EDINGHOOK. } by which weeds are cut away or extirpated.

In May get a weedhook, a crotch, and a glove,
And weed out such weeds as the corn doth not love. Tusser.

The weeding-hook of reformation would, after two ages, pluck up his glorious poppy. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. I.

WE'EDLESS. adj. [from weed.] Free from weeds; free from any thing useless or noxious.

So many weedless paradises be,
Which of themselves produce no venomous sin. Donne.

A crystal brook,
When troubled most it does the bottom show;

WE'EDY. adj. [from weed.]

1. Consisting of weeds.

There on the pendant boughs, her coronet weed
Clamb'ring to hang, an envious sliver broke,
When down her weedy trophies and herself
Fell in the weeping brook. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. Abounding with weeds.

Hid in a weedy lake all night I lay,
Secure of safety. Dryden, Æn.

If it is weedy, let it lie upon the ground. Mortimer.

WEEK.† n. s. [peoc, Saxon; weke, Dutch; wecka, Swedish; from the M. Goth. wik, ordo. Serenius.] The space of seven days.

Fulfil her week, and we will give thee this also. Gen. xxix.

The division of time by weeks, hath been universally observed in the world, not only amongst the civilized, but likewise among the most barbarous nations. Wilkins.

WE'EKDAY. n. s. [week and day.] Any day not Sunday.

One solid dish his weekday meal affords,
An added pudding solemniz'd the Lord's. Pope.

WE'EKLY. adj. [from week.] Happening, produced, or done once a week; hebdomadary.

The Jews had always their weekly readings of the law of Moses. Hooker.

So liv'd our sires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with heirs their weekly bill. Dryden.

Nothing more frequent in their weekly papers, than affecting to confound the terms of clergy and high-church, and then loading the latter with calumny. Swift.

WE'EKLY. adv. [from week.] Once a week; by hebdomadal periods.

These are obliged to perform divine worship in their turns weekly, and are sometimes called hebdomadal canons. Ayliffe.

WEEL.† } n. s. [pæl, Saxon.]
WE'ELY. }

1. A whirlpool. A Lancashire word. Ray.

2. A twiggen snare or trap for fish, [perhaps from willow.]

These fishes are taken generally by a little sein-net; especially the eels in weellies. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Who would think your father should lay weels
To catch you thus? Mayne, City Watch.

To WEEN. v. n. [penan, Saxon; waenen, Dutch.] To think; to imagine; to form a notion; to fancy. Obsolete.

Ah! lady dear, quoth then the gentle knight,
Well may I ween your grief is wond'rous great. Spenser, F. Q.
So well it her beseems, that ye would ween
Some angel she had been. Spenser, Epithal.
When weening to return, whence they did stray,
They cannot find that path which first was shown;
But wander to and fro in ways unknown,
Furthest from end then, when they nearest ween. Spenser.
Thy father, in pity of my hard distress,
Levy'd an army, weening to redeem
And reinstal me in the diadem. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
Ween you of better luck,
I mean, in perjur'd witness, than your master,
Whose minister you are, while here he liv'd
Upon this naughty earth. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.
They ween'd
That selfsame day, by fight or by surprise,
To win the mount of God; and on his throne
To set the envier of his state, the proud
Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain.
Milton, P. L.

To WEEP. v. n. preter. and part. pass. wept, weeped. [peopan Sax.]

1. To show sorrow by tears.

In that sad time
My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear;
And what these sorrows could not hence exhale,
That beauty hath, and made them blind with weeping.
Shakspeare.

I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmannerly sadness in his youth. Shakspeare.

The days of weeping and mourning for Moses were ended. Deut. xxxiv. 8.

Have you wept for your sin, so that you were indeed sorrowful in your spirit? Are you so sorrowful that you hate it? Do you so hate it that you have left it? Bp. Taylor.

Away, with women weep, and leave me here,
Fix'd, like a man, to die without a tear,
Or save, or slay us both. Dryden.
A corpse it was, but whose it was, unknown;
Yet mov'd, howe'er, she made the case her own;
Took the bad omen of a shipwreck'd man,
As for a stranger wept. Dryden.

When Darius wept over his army, that within a single age not a man of all that confluence would be left alive, Artabanus improved his meditation by adding, that yet all of them should meet with so many evils, that every one should wish himself dead long before. Wake, Prep. for Death.

2. To shed tears from any passion.

Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow sung,
That such a king should play bo-peep,
And go the fools among. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. To lament; to complain.

They weep unto me, saying, Give us flesh that we may eat. Numbers.

To WEEP. v. a.

1. To lament with tears; to bewail; to bemoan.

If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes. Shakspeare.
Nor was I near to close his dying eyes,
To wash his wounds, to weep his obsequies. Dryden.
We wand'ring go
Through dreary wastes, and weep each other's woe. Pope.

2. To shed moisture.

Thus was this place
A happy rural seat of various view,
Groves whose rich trees wept od'rous gums and balm.
Milton, P. L.

3. To drop.

Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
The weeping amber or the balmy tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are borne,
And realms commanded which those trees adorn. Pope.

4. To abound with wet.

Rye-grass grows on clayey and weeping grounds. Mortimer.

WE'EPER. n. s. [from weep.]

1. One who sheds tears; a lamenter; a bewailer; a mourner.

If you have served God in a holy life, send away the women and the weepers: tell them it is as much intemperance to weep too much as to laugh too much: if thou art alone, or with fitting company, die as thou should'st; but do not die impatiently, and like a fox catched in a trap. Bp. Taylor.

Laughter is easy; but the wonder lies,
What store of brine supply'd the weeper's eyes. Dryden.

2. A white border on the sleeve of a mourning coat.

WE'EPINGLY.* adv. [from weep.] With weeping; in tears.

She took her son into her arms weepingly laughing.
Wotton, Elem. of Architect.

Such as these, weepingly inclined, should be as full of all outward expression of devotion, as if they were just then to be converted. Echard, Answ. to Cont. of the Cl. p. 139.

WE'ERISH. adj. [See WEARISH.] This old word is used by Ascham in a sense which the lexicographers seem not to have known. Applied to tastes, it means insipid; applied to the body, weak and washy: here it seems to mean sour; surly.

A voice not soft, weak, piping, womanish; but audible, strong, and manlike: a countenance not weerish and crabbed but fair and comely. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

To WEET. v. n. preterite wot or wote. [pitan, Saxon weten, Dutch.] To know; to be informed; to have knowledge. Obsolete.

Him the prince with gentle court did board;
Sir knight, mought I of you this court'sy read,
To weet why on your shield, so goodly scor'd,
Bear ye the picture of that lady's head? Spenser.
I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to weet
We stand up peerless. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
But well I weet thy cruel wrong
Adorns a nobler poet's song. Prior.

WE'ETLESS.† adj. [from weet.]

1. Unknowing.

And now all weetlesse of the wretched stormes
In which his love was lost, he slept full fast. Spenser, F. Q.

2. Unsuspected.

But the false archer, which that arrow shot
So slyly that she did not feel the wound,
Did smile full smoothly at her weetlesse wofull stound.
Spenser, F. Q.

WE'EVIL. n. s. [pepel, Saxon; vevel, Dutch; curculio, Latin.] A grub.

A worm called a weevil, bred under ground, feedeth upon roots; as parsnips and carrots. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Corn is so innocent from breeding of mice, that it doth not produce the very weevils that live in it and consume it. Bentley.

WE'EZEL. n. s. [See WEASEL.]

I suck melancholy out of a song, as a weazel sucks eggs. Shakspeare.

The corn-devouring weezel here abides,
And the wise ant. Dryden, Georg.

WEFT. The old preterite and part. pass. of wave. Obsolete. Spenser.

WEFT. n. s. [guaive, French; vofa, to wander, Icelandick; vagus, Latin.]

1. That of which the claim is generally waved; any thing wandering without an owner, and seized by the lord of the manour.

His horse, it is the herald's weft;
No, 'tis a mare. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

2. It is in Bacon for waft, a gentle blast.

The smell of violets exceedeth in sweetness that of spices, and the strongest sort of smells are best in a weft afar off. Bacon.

WEFT.† n. s. [pefta, Saxon; waeft, Su. Goth. from waefwa, to weave.] The woof of cloth.

WE'FTAGE. n. s. [from weft.] Texture.

The whole muscles, as they lie upon the bones, might be truly tanned; whereby the weftage of the fibres might more easily be observed. Grew, Mus.

To WEIGH. v. a. [pægan, Saxon; weyhen, Dutch.]

1. To examine by the balance.

Earth taken from land adjoining to the Nile, and preserved, so as not to be wet nor wasted, and weighed daily, will not alter weight until the seventeenth of June, when the river beginneth to rise; and then it will grow more and more ponderous, till the river cometh to its height. Bacon.

The Eternal hung forth his golden scales,
Wherein all things created first he weigh'd. Milton, P. L.

She does not weigh her meat in a pair of scales, but she weighs it in a much better balance; so much as gives a proper strength to her body, and renders it able and willing to obey the soul. Law.

2. To be equivalent to in weight.

They that must weigh out my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not here;
They are, as all my comforts are, far hence. Shakspeare.

By the exsuction of the air out of a glass-vessel, it made that vessel take up, or suck up, to speak in the common language, a body weighing divers ounces. Boyle.

3. To pay, allot, or take by weight.

They weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. Zech. xi.

4. To raise; to take up the anchor.

Barbarossa, using this exceeding cheerfulness of his soldiers, weighed up the fourteen gallies he had sunk. Knolles.

They having freight
Their ships with spoile enough, weigh anchor streight. Chapman.

Here he left me, ling'ring here delay'd
His parting kiss, and there his anchor weigh'd. Dryden.

5. To examine; to balance in the mind; to consider.

Regard not who it is which speaketh, but weigh only what is spoken. Hooker.

I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer,
And find our griefs heavier than our offences. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The ripeness or unripeness of the occasion must ever be well weighed. Bacon.

His majesty's speedy march left that design to be better weighed and digested. Clarendon.

You chose a retreat, and not till you had maturely weighed the advantages of rising higher, with the hazards of the fall. Dryden.

All grant him prudent; prudence interest weighs,
And interest bids him seek your love and praise. Dryden.

The mind, having the power to suspend the satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to examine them on all sides, and weigh them with others. Locke.

He is the only proper judge of our perfections, who weighs the goodness of our actions by the sincerity of our intentions. Addison, Spect.

6. To compare by the scales.

Here in nice balance truth with gold she weighs,
And solid pudding against empty praise. Pope.

7. To regard; to consider as worthy of notice.

I weigh not you ———
You do not weigh me; that is, you care not for me. Shakspeare.

8. To WEIGH down. To overbalance.

Fear weighs down faith with shame. Daniel, Civ. War.

9. To WEIGH down. To overburden; to oppress with weight; to depress.

In thy blood will reign
A melancholy damp of cold and dry,
To weigh thy spirits down. Milton, P. L.

Her father's crimes
Sit heavy on her, and weigh down her prayers;
A crown usurp'd, a lawful king depos'd,
His children murder'd. Dryden, Span. Friar.

My soul is quite weigh'd down with care, and asks
The soft refreshment of a moment's sleep. Addison, Cato.

Excellent persons, weighed down by this habitual sorrow of heart, rather deserve our compassion than reproach. Addison.

To WEIGH. v. n.

1. To have weight.

Exactly weighing and strangling a chicken in the scales, upon an immediate ponderation, we could discover no difference in weight; but suffering it to lie eight or ten hours until it grew perfectly cold, it weighed most sensibly lighter. Brown.

2. To be considered as important; to have weight in the intellectual balance.

This objection ought to weigh with those, whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge. Locke.

A wise man is then best satisfied, when he finds that the same argument which weighs with him has weighed with thousands before him, and is such as hath borne down all opposition. Addison.

3. To raise the anchor.

When gath'ring clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys, he cries. Dryden.

4. To bear heavily; to press hard.

Can'st thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

5. To sink by its own weight.

The Indian fig boweth so low, as it taketh root again; the plenty of the sap, and the softness of the stalk, making the bough, being overloaden, weigh down. Bacon.

WE'IGHED. adj. [from weigh.] Experienced.

In an embassy of weight, choice was made of some sad person of known experience, and not of a young man, not weighed in state matters. Bacon.

WE'IGHER.† n. s. [from weigh.]

1. One who weighs. Huloet.

2. Any thing which weighs, or is considered important.

The worse [choice,] most an end, was the weigher. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 3.

WEIGHT.† n. s. [pæzeð, Saxon; the third person singular of the indicative of pæzan: the weight of any thing, being that which it weigheth. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. Quantity measured by the balance.

Tobacco cut and weighed, and then dried by the fire, loseth weight; and, after being laid in the open air, recovereth weight again. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Fain would I chuse a middle course to steer;
Nature's too kind, and justice too severe:
Speak for us both, and to the balance bring,
On either side, the father and the king:
Heav'n knows my heart is bent to favour thee;
Make it but scanty weight, and leave the rest to me. Dryden.

So was every thing of the temple, even to the weight of a flesh-hook, given to David, as you may see. Leslie.

Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight; and yet there was no acid found in its body. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. A mass by which, as the standard, other bodies are examined.

Just balances, just weights shall ye have. Lev. xix. 36.

Undoubtedly there were such weights which the physicians used, who, though they might reckon according to the weight of the money, they did not weigh their drugs with pieces of money. Arbuthnot on Coins.

When the balance is entirely broke, by mighty weights fallen into either scale, the power will never continue long in equal division, but run entirely into one. Swift.

3. Ponderous mass.

A man leapeth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if proportionable, strengtheneth the sinews by contracting them; otherwise, where no contraction is needful, weight hindereth; as we see in horseraces, men are curious to foresee that there be not the least weight upon the one horse more than upon the other. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards, and then forwards, with so much the greater force. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Wolsey, who from his own great store might have
A palace or a college for his grave,
Lies here interr'd?
Nothing but earth to earth, no pond'rous weight
Upon him, but a pebble or a quoit:
If thus thou liest neglected, what must we Hope after death, who are but shreds of thee? Bp. Corbet.

All their confidence
Under the weight of mountains bury'd deep. Milton, P. L.

Pride, like a gulf, swallows us up; our very virtues, when so leavened, becoming weights and plummets to sink us to the deeper ruin. Gov. of the Tongue.

Then shun the ill; and know, my dear,
Kindness and constancy will prove
The only pillars fit to bear
So vast a weight as that of love. Prior.

4. Gravity; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

Heaviness or weight is not here considered as being such a natural quality, whereby condensed bodies do of themselves tend downwards; but rather as being an affection, whereby they may be measured. Wilkins.

The shaft that slightly was impress'd,
Now from his heavy fall with weight increas'd,
Drove through his neck. Dryden.

What natural agent impel them so strongly with a transverse side blow against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are falling? Bentley.

5. Pressure; burthen; overwhelming power.

Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight. Shakspeare.

As some of the angels did scarce sooner receive, than break the law of obedience; so some men, by an unhappy imitation of such angels, are more ready to slander the weight of their yoke than to bear it. Holyday.

So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign,
Under her own weight groaning. Milton, P. L.

We must those, who groan beneath the weight
Of age, disease, or want, commiserate. Denham.

The prince may carry the plough, but the weight lies upon the people. L'Estrange.

Possession's load was grown so great,
He sunk beneath the cumb'rous weight. Swift.

They are like so many weights upon our minds, that make us less able, and less inclined to raise up our thoughts and affections to the things that are above. Law.

6. Importance; power; influence; efficacy; consequence; moment.

How to make ye suddenly an answer,
In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,
In truth I know not. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

If this right of heir carry any weight with it, if it be the ordinance of God, must not all be subject to it. Locke.

To make the sense of esteem or disgrace sink the deeper, and be of the more weight, other agreeable or disagreeable things should constantly accompany these different states. Locke.

An author's arguments lose their weight, when we are persuaded that he only writes for argument's sake. Addison.

See, Lord, the sorrows of my heart,
Ere yet it be too late;
And hear my Saviour's dying groans,
To give those sorrows weight. Addison, Spect.

The solemnities that encompass the magistrate add dignity to all his actions, and weight to all his words. Atterbury.

We'ightily. adv. [from weighty.]

1. Heavily; ponderously.

2. Solidly; importantly.

Is his poetry the worse, because he makes his agents speak weightily and sententiously? Broome on the Odyss.

We'ightiness. n. s. [from weighty.]

1. Ponderosity; gravity; heaviness.

2. Solidity; force.

I fear I have dwelt longer on this passage than the weightiness of any argument in it requires. Locke.

3. Importance.

The apparent defect of her judgment, joined to the weightiness of the adventure, caused many to marvel. Hayward.

We'ightless. adj. [from weight.] Light; having no gravity.

How by him balanc'd in the weightless air?
Can'st thou the wisdom of his works declare? Sandys.

It must both weightless and immortal prove,
Because the centre of it is above. Dryden.

We'ighty. adj. [from weight.]

1. Heavy; ponderous.

You have already weary'd fortune so,
She cannot farther be your friend or foe;
But sits all breathless, and admires to feel
A fate so weighty, that it stops her wheel. Dryden.

2. Important; momentous; efficacious.

I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

It only forbids suits in lighter losses and indignities, such as our Lord there mentions, and making the law the instrument of revenge in weightier matters. Kettlewell.

No fool Pythagoras was thought:
Whilst he his weighty doctrines taught,
He made his list'ning scholars stand,
Their mouth still cover'd with their hand:
Else, may-be, some odd thinking youth,
Less friend to doctrine than to truth,
Might have refus'd to let his ears
Attend the musick of the spheres. Prior.

Thus spoke to my lady the knight full of care,
Let me have your advice in a weighty affair. Swift.

3. Rigorous; severe. Not in use.

If, after two days' shine, Athens contains thee,
Attend our weightier judgment. Shakspeare, Timon.

Weird.* adj. [from pyrd, peard, Sax. fate: the plural means the fates, who are called the weird sisters in Gawen Douglas's Virgil. G. Chalmers.] Skilled in witchcraft.

The weird sisters hand-in-hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To the weird lady of the woods,
Full long and many a daye,
Thro' lonely shades and thickets rough,
He winds his weary waye. Old Ballad, Birth of St. George.

To Weive. v. a. [now written wave, and sometimes waive.] To decline; to withdraw; to forsake.

Baptisme they receiven,
And all their false goddes weiven. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.
He was deceived
Of love, and from his purpose weived. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.

We'laway. interj. [This I once believed a corruption of weal away, that is, happiness is gone: so Junius explained it; but the Saxon exclamation is palapa, woe on woe: from welaway is formed by corruption weladay.] Alas.

Harrow now out, and wealaway, he cried,
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light! Spenser.

Ah, welaway! most noble lords, how can
Your cruel eyes endure so piteous sight? Spenser.

Welaway, the while I was so fond,
To leave the good that I had in hond. Spenser.

WE'LCOME. adj. [bien venu, French; pilcume, Saxon; welkom, Dutch.]

1. Received with gladness; admitted willingly to any place or enjoyment; grateful; pleasing.

I serve you, madam:
Your graces are right welcome. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

He, though not of the plot, will like it,
And wish it should proceed; for, unto men
Prest with their wants, all change is ever welcome. B. Jonson.

Here let me earn my bread,
Till oft invocated death
Hasten the welcome end of all my pains. Milton, S. A.

He that knows how to make those he converses with easy, has found the true art of living, and being welcome and valued every where. Locke.

2. To bid WELCOME. To receive with professions of kindness.

Some stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us; and divers put their arms a little abroad, which is their gesture when they bid any welcome. Bacon.

WE'LCOME. interj. A form of salutation used to a new comer, elliptically used for you are welcome.

Welcome, he said,
O long expected to my dear embrace. Dryden.
Welcome, great monarch, to your own. Dryden.

WE'LCOME. n. s.

1. Salutation of a new comer.

Welcome ever smiles, and farewel goes out sighing. Shakspeare.

Leontes opening his free arms, and weeping
His welcome forth. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

2. Kind reception of a new comer.

I should be free from injuries, and abound as much in the true causes of welcomes, as I should find want of the effects thereof. Sidney.

I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Madam, new years may well expect to find
Welcome from you, to whom they are so kind:
Still as they pass they court and smile on you,
And make your beauty as themselves seem new. Waller.

Where diligence opens the door of the understanding, and impartiality keeps it, truth finds an entrance and a welcome too. South, Serm.

To WE'LCOME. v. a. To salute a new comer with kindness.

I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewel to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

They stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us. Bacon.

Thus we salute thee with our early song,
And welcome thee, and wish thee long. Milton.

To welcome home
His warlike brother, is Pirithous come. Dryden.

The lark and linnet strain their warbling throats,
To welcome in the spring. Dryden.

WE'LCOME to our house. n. s. [lactuca marina, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

WE'LCOMENESS. n. s. [from welcome.] Gratefulness.

Our joys, after some centuries of years, may seem to have grown elder, by having been enjoyed so many ages; yet will they really still continue new, not only upon the scores of their welcomeness, but by their perpetually equal, because infinite, distance from a period. Boyle.

WE'LCOMER. n. s. [from welcome.] The saluter or receiver of a new comer.

Farewel, thou woeful welcomer of glory. Shakspeare.

WELD or Would.† n. s. [luteola, Latin.] Yellow weed, or dyer's weed.

Many colouring materials, — as red-wood, weld, woad. Obs. on Dyeing, Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 302.

To WELD, for To wield.†

Those that weld the awful crown. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

To WELD.† v. a. [wella, Swed. the same. Serenius.] To beat one mass into another, so as to incorporate them.

Sparkling or welding heat is used when you double up your iron to make it thick enough, and so weld or work in the doubling into one another. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

WE'LDER. n. s. [A term perhaps merely Irish; though it may be derived from To wield, to turn or manage: whence wielder, welder.] Manager; actual occupier.

Such immediate tenants have others under them, and so a third and fourth in subordination, till it comes to the welder, as they call him, who sits at a rack-rent, and lives miserably. Swift.

WE'LFARE. n. s. [well and fare.] Happiness; success; prosperity.

If friends to a government forbear their assistance, they put it in the power of a few desperate men to ruin the welfare of those who are superior to them in strength and interest. Addison.

Discretion is the perfection of reason: cunning is a kind of instinct that only looks out after our immediate interest and welfare. Addison, Spect.

To WELK.† v. a. Of this word in Spenser I know not well the meaning: pealcan, in Saxon, is to roll; wolken, in German, and pelcen, in Saxon, are clouds; whence I suppose welk, or whilk, is an undulation or corrugation, or corrugated or convolved body. Whilk is used for a small shell-fish. Dr. Johnson. — The contemporary commentator on Spenser explains welked by shortened or impaired: and to this agrees our elder languaage: "The lond now welketh, and now it groweth." Gower, Conf. Am. Prol. It seems in Spenser, both active and neuter.

Now sad Winter welked hath the day,
And Phœbus, weary of his yearly task,
Established hath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes hask. Spenser.

As gentle shepherd in sweet eventide,
When ruddy Phœbus gins to welk in west,
Marks which do bite their hasty supper best. Spenser.

The welked Phœbus gan avale
His weary wain. Spenser.

To WELK.* v. n. To dry; to wither. North. Mown grass in drying for hay is said to welk. Grose. Thus in our old lexicography "welkynge, marcor; welkyd, marcidus." Pr. Parv.

WE'LKED. adj. Set with protuberances. Properly, I believe, whelked, from whelk.

Methought his eyes
Were two full moons: he had a thousand noses,
Horns welk'd and wav'd like the enridged sea. Shakspeare.

WE'LKIN.† n. s. [from pealcan, to roll, or pelcen, clouds, Sax.]

1. The visible regions of the air. Out of use, except in poetry.

Ne in all the welkin was no cloud. Chaucer.

He leaves the welkin way most beaten plain,
And rapt with whirling wheels inflames the skyen,
With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shine. Spenser.

The swallow peeps out of her nest,
And cloudy welkin cleareth. Spenser.

Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood:
Amaze the welkin with your broken staves. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

With feats of arms
From either end of heaven the welkin burns. Milton, P. L.

Now my task is smoothly done,
I can fly, or I can run
Quickly to the green earth's end,
Where the bow'd welkin slow doth bend. Milton, Comus.

Their hideous yells
Rend the dark welkin. Philips.

2. WELKIN eye, is, I suppose, blue eye; skycoloured eye. Dr. Johnson. — Not so, but a rolling eye, equally applicable to an eye of any colour. [pealcan, Sax. to roll.] Mr. H. Tooke.

Yet were it true
To say this boy were like me! Come, sir page,
Look on me with your welkin eye, sweet villain. Shakspeare.

WELL. n. s. [pelle, pœll, Saxon.]

1. A spring; a fountain; a source.

Begin then, sisters of the sacred well,
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring. Milton, Lycidas.

As the root and branch are but one tree,
And well and stream do but one river make;
So if the root and well corrupted be,
The stream and branch the same corruption take. Davies.

2. A deep narrow pit of water.

Now up, now down, like buckets in a well. Dryden.

The muscles are so many well-buckets: when one of them acts and draws, 'tis necessary that the other must obey. Dryden.

3. The cavity in which stairs are placed.

Hollow newelled stairs are made about a square hollow newel: suppose the well-hole to be eleven foot long, and six foot wide, and we would bring up a pair of stairs from the first floor eleven foot high, it being intended a sky-light shall fall through the hollow newel. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

To WELL. v. n. [peallan, Sax.] To spring; to issue as from a spring.

Thereby a crystal stream did gently play,
Which from a sacred fountain welled forth alway. Spenser.

A dreary corse,
All wallow'd in his own yet lukewarm blood,
That from his wound yet welled fresh, alas! Spenser.

Himself assists to lift him from the ground,
With clotted locks, and blood that well'd from out the wound. Dryden, Æn.

From his two springs,
Pure welling out, he through the lucid lake
Of fair Dambea rolls his infant stream. Thomson, Summer.

To WELL. v. a. To pour any thing forth.

To her people wealth they forth do well,
And health to every foreign nation. Spenser.

WELL. adj. [well seems to be sometimes an adjective, though it is not always easy to determine its relations.]

1. Not sick; being in health.

Lady, I am not well, else I should answer
From a full flowing stomach. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

In poison there is physick; and this news,
That would, had I been well, have made me sick,
Being sick, hath in some measure made me well. Shakspeare.

While thou art well, thou may'st do much good; but when thou art sick, thou canst not tell what thou shalt be able to do; it is not very much nor very good. Few men mend with sickness, as there are but few who by travel and a wandering life become devout. Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

Men under irregular appetites never think themselves well, so long as they fancy they might be better; then from better they must rise to best. L'Estrange.

'Tis easy for any, when well, to give advice to them that are not. Wake, Prep. for Death.

2. Happy.

Mark, we use
To say the dead are well. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Holdings were so plentiful, and holders so scarce, as well was the landlord who could get one to be his tenant. Carew.

Charity is made the constant companion and perfection of all virtues; and well it is for that virtue where it most enters, and longest stays. Sprat, Serm.

3. Convenient; advantageous.

This exactness is necessary, and it would be well too, if it extended itself to common conversation. Locke.

It would have been well for Genoa, if she had followed the example of Venice, in not permitting her nobles to make any purchase of lands in the dominions of a foreign prince. Addison.

4. Being in favour.

He followed the fortunes of that family; and was well with Henry the fourth. Dryden.

5. Recovered from any sickness or misfortune.

I am sorry
For your displeasure; but all will sure be well. Shakspeare.

Just thoughts and modest expectations are easily satisfied. If we don't over-rate our pretensions, all will be well. Collier.

WELL. adv. [wil, Gothick; pell, Saxon; wel, Dutch; vel, Icelandick.]

1. Not ill; not unhappily.

Some sense, and more estate, kind heav'n
To this well-lotted peer has given:
What then? he must have rule and sway;
Else all is wrong till he's in play. Prior.

2. Not ill; not wickedly.

My bargains, and well-won thrift he calls interest. Shakspeare.

Thou one bad act with many deeds well done

3. Skilfully; properly; in a laudable manner.

Beware and govern well thy appetite. Milton, P. L.

Whether the learn'd Minerva be her theme,
Or chaste Diana bathing in the stream;
None can record their heavenly praise so well. Dryden.

What poet would not mourn to see
His brother write as well as he? Swift.

4. Not amiss; not unsuccessfully; not erroneously.

Solyman commended them for a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason. Knolles.

The soldier that philosopher well blam'd,
Who long and loudly in the schools declaim'd. Denham.

'Tis almost impossible to translate verbally and well. Dryden.

5. Not insufficiently; not defectively.

The plain of Jordan was well watered everywhere. Genesis.

We are well able to overcome it. Num. xiii. 30.

The merchant adventurers being a strong company, and well underset with rich men, held out bravely. Bacon.

6. To a degree that gives pleasure.

I like well, in some places, fair columns upon frames of carpenters' work. Bacon.

7. With praise; favourably.

All the world speaks well of you. Pope.

8. Well is sometimes like the French bien, a term of concession.

The knot might well be cut, but untied it could not be. Sidney.

9. Conveniently; suitably.

Know,
In measure what the mind can well contain. Milton, P. L.

10. To a sufficient degree: a kind of slight sense.

A private caution I know not well how to sort, unless I should call it political, by no means to build too near a great neighbour. Wotton.

11. It is a word by which something is admitted as the ground for a conclusion.

Well, let's away, and say how much is done. Shakspeare.

Well, by this author's confession, a number superior are for the succession in the house of Hanover. Swift.

12. As well as. Together with; not less than.

Long and tedious, as well as grievous and uneasy courses of physick, how necessary soever to the cure, much enfeeble the patient, and reduce him to a low and languishing state. Blackmore.

Coptos was the magazine of all the trade from Æthiopia, by the Nile, as well as of those commodities that came from the west by Alexandria. Arbuthnot on Coins.

13. Well is him or me; bene est, he is happy.

Well is him that dwelleth with a wife of understanding, and that hath not slipped with his tongue. Ecclus. xxv. 8.

14. Well nigh. Nearly; almost.

I freed well nigh half the angelick name. Milton.

15. Well enough. In a moderate degree; tolerably.

16. It is used much in composition to express any thing right, laudable, or not defective.

Antiochus understanding him not to be well-affected to his affairs, provided for his own safety. 2 Mac. iv. 21.

There may be safety to the well-affected Persians; but to those which do conspire against us, a memorial of destruction. Esth. xvi. 23.

Should a whole host at once discharge the bow,
My well-aim'd shaft with death prevents the foe. Pope.

What well-appointed leader fronts us here? Shakspeare.

Well-apparelled April on the heel
Of limping winter treads. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

The power of wisdom march'd before,
And ere the sacrificing throng he join'd,
Admonish'd thus his well-attending mind. Pope.

Such musick —
Before was never made,
But when of old the sons of morning sung,
Whilst the Creator great
His constellations set,
And the well-balanc'd world on hinges hung. Milton, Ode.

Learners must at first be believers, and their master's rules having been once made axioms to them, they mislead those who think it sufficient to excuse them, if they go out of their way in a well-beaten track. Locke.

He chose a thousand horse, the flower of all
His warlike troops, to wait the funeral:
To bear him back, and share Evander's grief;
A well-becoming, but a weak relief. Dryden.

Those opposed files,
Which lately met in the intestine shock,
And furious close of civil butchery,
Shall now, in mutual well-beseeming rank,
March all one way. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

O'er the Elean plains, thy well-breath'd horse
Impels the flying car, and wins the course. Dryden.

More dismal than the loud disploded roar
Of brazen enginery, that ceaseless storms
The bastion of a well-built city. Philips.

He conducted his course among the same well-chosen friendships and alliances with which he began it. Addison.

My son corrupts a well-derived nature
With his inducement. Shakspeare.

If good accrue, 'tis conferred most commonly on the base and infamous; and only happening sometimes to well-deservers. Dryden.

It grieves me he should desperately adventure the loss of his well-deserving life. Sidney.

What a pleasure is well-directed study in the search of truth! Locke.

A certain spark of honour, which rose in her well-disposed mind, made her fear to be alone with him, with whom alone she desired to be. Sidney.

The unprepossessed, the well-disposed, who both together make much the major part of the world, are affected with a due fear of these things. South, Serm.

A clear idea is that, whereof the mind hath such a full and evident perception, as it does receive from an outward object, operating duly on a well-disposed organ. Locke.

Amid the main, two mighty fleets engage;
Actium surveys the well-disputed prize. Dryden.

The ways of well-doing are in number even as many as are the kinds of voluntary actions: so that whatsoever we do in this world, and may do it ill, we shew ourselves therein by well-doing to be wise. Hooker.

The conscience of well-doing may pass for a recompence. L'Estrange.

Beg God's grace that the day of judgment may not overtake us unawares, but that by a patient well-doing, we may wait for glory, honour, and immortality. Nelson.

God will judge every man according to his works; to them, who by patient continuance in well-doing, endure through the heat and burden of the day, he will give the reward of their labour. Rogers, Serm.

As far the spear I throw,
As flies an arrow from the well-drawn bow. Pope.

Fair nymphs and well-dress'd youths around her shone,
But ev'ry eye was fixt on her alone. Pope.

Such a doctrine in St. James's air,
Shou'd chance to make the well-dress'd rabble stare. Pope.

The desire of esteem, riches, or power, makes men espouse the well-endowed opinions in fashion. Locke.

We ought to stand firm in well-established principles, and not be tempted to change for every difficulty. Watts.

Echenus sage, a venerable man!
Whose well-taught mind the present age surpass'd. Pope.

Some reliques of the true antiquity, though disguised, a well-eyed man may happily discover. Spenser on Ireland.

How sweet the products of a peaceful reign!
The heaven-taught poet, and enchanting strain:
The well-fill'd palace, the perpetual feast;
A land rejoicing, and a people blest. Pope.

Turkish blood did his young hands imbrue.
From thence returning with deserv'd applause,
Against the Moors his well-flesh'd sword he draws. Dryden.

Fairest piece of well-form'd earth,
Urge not thus your haughty birth. Waller.

A rational soul can be no more discerned in a well-formed, than ill-shaped infant. Locke.

A well-formed proposition is sufficient to communicate the knowledge of a subject. Watts.

Oh! that I'd dy'd before the well-fought wall!
Had some distinguish'd day renown'd my fall,
All Greece had paid my solemn funerals. Pope.

Good men have a well-grounded hope in another life; and are as certain of a future recompence, as of the being of God. Atterbury.

Let firm, well-hammer'd soles protect thy feet
Through freezing snows. Gay, Trivia.

The camp of the heathen was strong, and well-harnessed, and compassed round with horsemen. 1 Mac. iv. 7.

Among the Romans, those who saved the life of a citizen, were dressed in an oaken garland; but among us, this has been a mark of such well-intentioned persons as would betray their country. Addison.

He, full of fraudful arts,
This well-invented tale for truth imparts. Dryden.

He, by enquiry, got to the well-known house of Kalander. Sidney.

Soon as thy letters trembling I unclose,
That well-known name awakens all my woes. Pope.

Where proud Athens rears her tow'ry head,
With opening streets, and shining structures spread,
She past, delighted, with the well-known seats. Pope.

From a confin'd well-manag'd store,
You both employ and feed the poor. Waller.

A noble soul is better pleased with a zealous vindicator of liberty, than with a temporizing poet, or well-manner'd court slave, and one who is ever decent, because he is naturally servile. Dryden, Ded. to Juv.

Well-meaners think no harm; but for the rest,
Things sacred they pervert, and silence is the best. Dryden.

By craft they may prevail on the weakness of some well-meaning men to engage in their designs. Rogers, Serm.

He examines that well-meant, but unfortunate, lie of the conquest of France. Arbuthnot.

A critick supposes he has done his part, if he proves a writer to have failed in an expression; and can it be wondered at, if the poets seem resolved not to own themselves in any error? for as long as one side despises a well-meant endeavour, the other will not be satisfied with a moderate approbation. Pope, Pref. to his Works.

Many sober, well-minded men, who were real lovers of the peace of the kingdom, were imposed upon. Clarendon.

Jarring int'rests of themselves create
The according musick of a well-mix'd state. Pope.

When the blast of winter blows,
Into the naked wood he goes;
And seeks the tusky boar to rear,
With well-mouth'd hounds, and pointed spear. Dryden.

The applause that other people's reason gives to virtuous and well-ordered actions, is the proper guide of children, till they grow able to judge for themselves. Locke.

The fruits of unity, next unto the well-pleasing of God, which is all in all, are towards those that are without the church; the other toward those that are within. Bacon.

The exercise of the offices of charity is always well-pleasing to God, and honourable among men. Atterbury.

My voice shall sound, as you do prompt mine ear;
And I will stoop and humble my intents
To your well-practis'd wise directions. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The well-proportion'd shape, and beauteous face,
Shall never more be seen by mortal eyes. Dryden.

'Twas not the hasty product of a day,
But the well-ripen'd fruit of wise delay. Dryden.

Procure those that are fresh gathered, strait, smooth, and well-rooted. Mortimer, Husbandry.

If I should instruct them to make well-running verses, they want genius to give them strength. Dryden.

The eating of a well-seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end. Locke.

Instead of well-set hair, baldness. Isa. iii. 24.

A sharpe edg'd sword, he girt about
His well-spred shoulders. Chapman.

Abraham and Sarah were old, and well-stricken in age. Gen.

Many well-shaped innocent virgins are waddling like big-bellied women. Spectator.

We never see beautiful and well-tasted fruits from a tree choaked with thorns and briars. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

The well-tim'd oars
With sounding strokes divide the sparkling waves. Smith.

Wisdom's triumph is well-tim'd retreat,
As hard a science to the fair as great. Pope.

Mean time we thank you for your well-took labour.
Go to your rest. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Oh you are well-tun'd now; but I'll let down the pegs that make this musick. Shakspeare, Othello.

Her well-turn'd neck he view'd,
And on her shoulders her dishevel'd hair. Dryden.

A well-weighed judicious poem, which at first gains no more upon the world than to be just received, insinuates itself by insensible degrees into the liking of the reader. Dryden.

He rails
On me, my bargains, and my well-won thrift,
Which he calls interest. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Each by turns the other's bound invade,
As, in some well-wrought picture, light and shade. Pope.

WE'LLADAY. interject. [This is a corruption of welaway. See WELAWAY.] Alas.

O welladay, mistress Ford, having an honest man to your husband, to give him such cause of suspicion. Shakspeare.

Ah, welladay! I'm shent with baneful smart. Gay.

WELLBE'ING. n. s. [well and be.] Happiness; prosperity.

Man is not to depend upon the uncertain dispositions of men for his wellbeing, but only on God and his own spirit. Bp. Taylor, Living Holy.

For whose wellbeing
So amply, and with hands so liberal,
Thou hast provided all things. Milton, P. L.

The most sacred ties of duty are founded upon gratitude: such as the duties of a child to his parent, and of a subject to his sovereign. From the former there is required love and honour, in recompence of being; and from the latter obedience and subjection, in recompence of protection and wellbeing. South, Serm.

All things are subservient to the beauty, order, and well-being of the whole. L'Estrange.

He who does not co-operate with this holy spirit, receives none of those advantages which are perfecting of his nature, and necessary to his wellbeing. Spectator.

WELLBO'RN. adj. Not meanly descended.

One whose extraction from an antient line,
Gives hope again that wellborn men may shine. Waller.

Heav'n, that wellborn souls inspires,
Prompts me through lifted swords, and rising fires,
To rush undaunted to defend the walls. Dryden.

WELLBRE'D. adj. [well and bred.] Elegant of manners; polite.

None have been with admiration read,
But who, besides their learning, were wellbred. Roscommon.

Betray not any of your wellwishers into the like inconveniencies. Spectator.

No man is more your sincere wellwisher than myself, or more the sincere wellwisher of your family. Pope.

WELSH.* adj. Relating to the people or country of Wales. [" This word, as well as other gentile nouns, is excluded from Dr. Johnson's dictionary; but the opinion of the author concerning it, is shown by those places in which he refers to the language of that people for etymology, as in cuckoo, hoiden, &c. [where he writes it Welsh.] I differ from him in it, because I observe that ch is usual in such nouns, whenever a consonant precedes the final letters, as Dutch, French, Scotch: sh is always preceded by an i, as English, Irish, Scottish, &c. Nor is the form of lch repugnant to the use of our language, for we have several words so terminated, as filch, milch, &c. I should therefore write Welch." Nares, Elem. of Orthœp. p. 318.]

Heavens defend me from that Welsh fairy! Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

WELSH.* n. s. The people of Wales.

Dathan said that he was provoked to it by the Welshman, who pretended that the Welsh were an ancienter people than the Jews. Addison, Tatler, No. 256.

" Walteringe and walowinge, volutatio." Pr. Parv. See also Barret's Alv. 1580. And the second definition of the word before us.]

1. To roll in water or mire.

He must not float upon his wat'ry bier
Unwept, nor welter to the parching winds. Milton, Lycidas.

The companions of his fall o'erwhelm'd
He soon discerns; and well'ring by his side
The next himself. Milton, P. L.

The gasping head flies off; a purple flood
Flows from the trunk, that welters in the blood. Dryden.

He sung Darius, great and good,
By too severe a fate,
Fallen from his high estate,
And welt'ring in his blood. Dryden, St. Cecilia.

Bellona wades in blood; that mangled body,
Deform'd with wounds and welt'ring in its gore,
I know it well; Oh close the dreadful scene;
Believe me, Phœbus, I have seen too much. Murphy.

2. To roll voluntarily; to wallow.

By this bedde is understande the fylthy voluptuousnes of the body, wherin the synner waltereth and wrappeth hymselfe, lyke as a sowe waloweth in the stynkynge gore pytte, or in the puddell. Bp. Fish. Ps. p. 18.

WEN. n. s. [pen, Saxon.] A fleshy or callous excrescence, or protuberance.

Warts are said to be destroyed by the rubbing them with a green elder stick, and then burying the stick to rot in muck. It would be tried with corns and wens, and such other excrescences. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Mountains seem but so many wens and unnatural protuberances upon the face of the earth. More.

The poet rejects all incidents which are foreign to his poem; they are wens and other excrescences, which belong not to the body. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

A promontory wen with griesly grace,
Stood high upon the handle of his face. Dryden.

WENCH.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson refers our word to the Sax. pencle, a handmaid: Mr. Horne Tooke, to the verb pincian, to wink; wench, as he most absurdly pronounces it, being the past participle, implying therefore one that is winked at, one who may be had by a nod or a wink! — What can be a better etymon than the Sax. cpen, Goth. quens, a girl, a wench, a woman; whence our quean? See QUEAN.]

1. A young woman.

What do I, silly wench, know what love hath prepared for me? Sidney.

Now — how dost thou look now? Oh ill-starr'd wench!
Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at compt,
This look of thine will hurl my soul from heav'n,
And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl,
Ev'n like thy chastity. Shakspeare, Othello.

Thou wouldst perswade her to a worse offence
Than that, whereof thou didst accuse her wench. Donne.

2. A young woman in contempt; a strumpet.

Junius, Sin Stigm. (1639,) p. 269.

To WHI'FFLE. v. n. [from whiff.] To move inconstantly, as if driven by a puff of wind.

Nothing is more familiar, than for a whiffling fop, that has not one grain of the sense of a man of honour, to play the hero.
L'Estrange.

Was our reason given, to be thus puff'd about,
Like a dry leaf, an idle straw, a feather,
The sport of ev'ry whiffling blast that blows? Rowe.

A person of a whiffling and unsteady turn of mind cannot keep close to a point of controversy, but wanders from it perpetually. Watts.

To WHI'FFLE.* v. a. To disperse as by a puff; to blow away; to scatter.

This is a plain and obvious sense — against such as would whiffle away all these truths by resolving them into a mere moral allegory. More on the Sev. Ch. ch. 9.

WHI'FFLE.* n. s. Anciently, a fife or small flute. See WHIFFLER. Douce.

WHI'FFLER.† n. s. [from whiffla, a fife; for whifflers were originally those who preceded armies or processions as fifers or pipers. Douce, Illustr. of Shaksp. i. 507.]

1. A harbinger, probably one with a horn or trumpet. Dr. Johnson. — A fifer or piper. Douce.

The beach
Pales in the flood with men, with wives and boys,
Whose shouts and claps outvoice the deep-mouth'd sea,
Which, like a mighty whiffler 'fore the king,
Seems to prepare his way. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

A new company of counterfeit vizards, whifflers, maskers, mummers. Burton, Anat. of Mel. Pref.

The wifflers had long staves, white and red.

Milton, Anim. Rem. Def. § 4.

2. One of no consequence; one moved with a whiff or puff; a trifler. [pæplepe, blatero. Douce.]

Our fine young ladies retain in their service a great number of supernumerary and insignificant fellows, which they use like whifflers, and commonly call shoeing horns. Spectator.

Every whiffler in a laced coat, who frequents the chocolate-house, shall talk of the constitution. Swift.

WHIG.† n. s. [hpæʒ, Sax.] A kind of sour or thin milk; whey. In some parts of the north of England, it means the watery part or whey of a baked custard.

With leeks and onions, whig and whey,
I must content me as I may.
Breton, Works of a Young Wit, (1577.)

Sweet growte, or whig, his bottle had.
Warner, Alb. England.

WHIG.† n. s. [The south-west counties of Scotland have seldom corn enough to serve them round the year; and the northern parts producing more than they need, those in the west come in the summer to buy at Leith the stores that come from the north; and from a word, whiggam, used in driving their horses, all that drove were called the whiggamors, and shorter the whiggs. Now in that year before the news came down of duke Hamilton's defeat, the ministers animated their people to rise and march to Edinburgh; and they came up marching at the head of their parishes with an unheard-of fury, praying and preaching all the way as they came. The marquis of Argyle and his party came and headed them, they being about six thousand. This was called the whiggamor's inroad; and ever after that, all that opposed the court came in contempt to be called whigs: and from Scotland the word was brought into England, where it is now one of our unhappy terms of disunion. Bp. Burnet. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Jamieson mentions, from Woodrow, that the whiggamors or whigs were so called from a kind of milk they were forced to drink in their wanderings and straits; and that this is the etymon generally adopted. But the former, he adds, is more probable. See Dr. Jamieson in V. WHIG.] One of the party, in our political history, opposed to the tories. Dr. Johnson has elsewhere observed, " a wise tory and a wise whig, I believe, will agree." See his explanation in Boswell's Life of him, under the year 1781.

Wit and fool are consequents to whig and tory; and every man is a knave or an ass to the contrary side.
Dryden, Pref. to Abs. and Achit.

Whoever has a true value for church and state, should avoid the extremes of whig for the sake of the former, and the extremes of tory on the account of the latter. Swift.

WHI'GGARCHY.* n. s. [whig, and ἀρχὴ, Greek.] Government by whigs.

Let them come roundly to the business, and in plain terms give us to understand, that they will not recognise any other government in Great Britain, but whiggarchy only.
Swift, Appendix to Cond. of the Allies.

WHI'GGISH. adj. [from whig.] Relating to the whigs.

She'll prove herself a tory plain,
From principles the whigs maintain;
And, to defend the whiggish cause,
Her topicks from the tories draws. Swift.

WHI'GGISM. n. s. [from whig.] The notions of a whig.

I could quote passages from fifty pamphlets, wholly made up of whiggism and atheism. Swift.

WHILE.† n. s. [weil, German; hpile, Saxon; hweila, M. Goth.] Time; space of time.

If my beauty be any thing, then let it obtain this much of you, that you will remain some while in this company, to ease your own travel and our solitariness. Sidney.

I have seen her rise from her bed, and again return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

One while we thought him innocent,
And then w' accus'd the consul. B. Jonson, Catiline.

We saw him feeding come,
And on his necke a burthen lugging home,
Most highly huge, of sere-wood; which the pile
That fed his fire, supplide all supper while. Chapman.

I hope all ingenuous persons will advertise me fairly, if they think it worth their while, of what they dislike in it. Digby.

Pausing a while, thus to herself she mus'd. Milton.

How couldst thou look for other, but that God should condemn thee for the doing of those things for which thine own conscience did condemn thee, all the while thou wast doing of them? Tillotson.

That which I have all this while been endeavouring to convince men to, is no other but what God himself doth particularly recommend. Tillotson.

Few, without the hope of another life, would think it worth their while to live above the allurements of sense.
Atterbury.

What fate has disposed of the papers, 'tis not worth while to tell. Locke.

WHILE. }
WHILES. } adv. [hpile, Saxon. Whiles is now out of use.]
WHILST. }

1. During the time that.

Whiles I was protector,
Pity was all the fault that was in me. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
What we have, we prize not to the worth,
Whiles we enjoy it; but being lackt and lost,
Why, then we rack the value. Shakspeare.
Repeated, while the sedentary earth
Attains her end. Milton, P. L.

2. As long as.

Use your memory, you will sensibly experience a gradual improvement, while you take care not to overload it. Watts.

3. At the same time that.

Whiles by the experiment of this ministration they glorify God, for your professed subjection unto the gospel. 2 Cor. ix.

Can he imagine that God sends forth an irresistible strength against some sins, whilst in others he permits men a power of repelling his grace? Dec. of Chr. Piety.

All hearts shall bend, and ev'ry voice
In loud applauding shouts rejoice,
While all his gracious aspect praise,
And crowds grow loyal as they gaze. Addison.
He sits attentive to his own applause,
While Wits and Templars ev'ry sentence raise,
And wonder with a foolish face of praise. Pope.

To WHILE. v. n. [from the noun.] To loiter.

Men guilty this way never have observed that the whiling time, the gathering together, and waiting a little before dinner, is the most aukwardly passed away of any. Spectator.

To WHILE.* v. a. To draw out; to consume in a tedious way.

The word "while" has been the father of a verb, which gives me an opportunity of lamenting, that I should have caused you to while away so much time in perusing this disquisition. Pegge, Anecd. of the Eng. Lang. p. 229.

WHI'LERE. adv. [while and ere, or before.] A little while ago; ere while. Not in use.

That cursed wight, from whom I 'scap'd whilere,
A man of hell, that calls himself Despair. Spenser.
Let us be jocund: will you troul the catch
You taught me but while-ere? Shakspeare.
Those armies that while-ere
Affrighted all the world, by him struck dead with fear. Drayton.
Here lies Hobbinol, our shepherd whilere. Ralegh.
He who, with all heaven's heraldry, whilere
Enter'd the world, now bleeds to give us ease. Milton, Ode.

WHI'LOM. adv. [hpilom, Saxon, that is, once on a time.] Formerly; once; of old. Not in use.

Where now the studious lawyers have their bowers,
There whilom wont the Templar knights abide,
Till they decayed through pride. Spenser.
In northern clime a val'rous knight
Did whilom kill his bear in fight,
And wound a fiddler. Hudibras.
Yet art thou not inglorious in thy fate;
For so Apollo, with unweeting hand,
Whilom did slay his dearly loved mate. Milton, Ode.

WHIM.† n. s. [This word is derived by Skinner from a thing turning round; nor can I find any etymology more probable. Dr. Johnson. — That of Serenius may not, however, be overpassed, viz. hwima, Icel. huc illuc circumspicere; hwima, Sueth. caput in gyrum agitare, unde hwimmerkant, cui caput est turbatum.] A freak; an odd fancy; a caprice; an irregular motion of desire.

All the superfluous whims relate,
That fill a female gamester's pate. Swift.
He learnt his whims, and high-flown notions too,
Such as fine men adopt, and fine men rue. Harte.

To WHI'MPER. v. n. [wimmeren, German.] To cry without any loud noise.

The father by his authority should always stop this sort of crying, and silence their whimpering. Locke.

A laughing, toying, wheedling, whimp'ring she,
Shall make him amble on a gossip's message. Rowe.
In peals of thunder now she roars, and now
She gently whimpers like a lowing cow. Swift.

WHI'MPERING.* n. s. [from the verb.] The act of uttering a small cry; a squeak.

The noise of little birds, the whimpering of mice, every small stirrage, waketh them. Granger on Eccles. (1621,) p. 320.

WHI'MPLED. adj. [I suppose from whimper.] This word seems to mean distorted with crying.

This whimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy,
This signior Junio's giant dwarf, Dan Cupid,
Regent of love-rhimes, lord of folded arms,
Th' anointed sovereign of sighs and groans. Shakspeare.

WHI'MSEY.† n. s. [Only another form of the word whim.] A freak; a caprice; an odd fancy; a whim.

I can feel
A whimsey in my blood. B. Jonson, Fox, (1607.)
You'll pick a bottle open, or a whimsey,
As soon as the best of us. Beaum. and Fl. Bloody Brother.

At this rate a pretended freak or whimsey may be palliated. L'Estrange.

All the ridiculous and extravagant shapes that can be imagined, all the fancies and whimsies of poets and painters, and Egyptian idolaters, if so be they are consistent with life and propagation, would be now actually in being, if our atheists' notion were true. Ray on the Creation.

So now, as health or temper changes,
In larger compass Alma ranges;
This day below, the next above,
As light or solid whimseys move. Prior.
What I speak, my fair Cloe, and what I write, shows
The difference there is betwixt nature and art;
I court others in verse, but I love thee in prose:
And they have my whimsies, but thou hast my heart. Prior.
Oranges in whimsey-boards went round. King.

He spoke this with such a sedate and undisturbed mind, that I could not impute it to melancholy, or a splenetick whimsey. Blackmore.

Th' extravagance of poetry
Is at a loss for figures to express
Men's folly, whimsies, and inconstancy. Swift.

To WHI'MSEY.* v. a. [from the noun.] To fill with whimsies.

To have a man's brains whimsied with his wealth. Beaum. and Fl. Rule a Wife.

WHI'MSICAL. adj. [from whimsey.] Freakish; capricious; oddly fanciful.

In another circumstance I am particular, or, as my neighbours call me, whimsical: as my garden invites into it all the birds, I do not suffer any one to destroy their nests. Addison.

WHI'MSICALLY.* adv. [from whimsical.] So as to be oddly fanciful.

Your situation and mine are whimsically odd in relation to the present dispute about articles and subscriptions. Dean Tucker, Lett. to Dr. Kippis, p. 67.

WHI'MSICALNESS.* n. s. [from whimsical.] State of being whimsical.

Every one values Mr. Pope, but every one for a different reason; one for his grave behaviour, another for his whimsicalness, &c. Pope, Lett. to M. Blount.

WHI'MWHAM.* n. s. [a ludicrous reduplication of whim.] A plaything; a toy; an odd device; a strange fancy; a freak.

A whim-wham,
Knit with a trim-tram. Skelton, Poems, p. 125.
They'll pull ye all to pieces for your whim-whams,
Your garters, and your gloves. Beaum. and Fl. Litt. Thief.
Your behaviours
Have made men stand amaz'd; ——
Your scorns of those that came to visit ye;
Your studied whim-whams, and your fine set faces. Beaum. and Fl. Wild-Goose Chase.

WHIN. n. s. [chwyn, Welsh; genista spinosa, Lat.] Furze; gorse.

With whins or with furzes thy hovel renew. Tusser.

Plants that have prickles in their leaf are holly, juniper, whin-bush, and thistle. Bacon.

To WHINE.† v. n. [hwina, Su. Goth. to mourn; quina, Icel. quainan, M. Goth.] To lament in low murmurs; to make a plaintive noise; to moan meanly and effeminately.

They came to the wood, where the hounds were in couples staying their coming, but with a whining accent craving liberty. Sidney.

At his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Twice and once the hedge-pig whin'd. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Whip him,
Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
And whine aloud for mercy. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

The common people have a whining tone and accent in their speech, as if they did still suffer some oppression. Davies.

Then, if we whine, look pale,
And tell our tale,
Men are in pain
For us again;
So, neither speaking, doth become
The lover's state, nor being dumb. Suckling.

He made a viler noise than swine
In windy weather, when they whine. Hudibras.

Some, under sheep's cloathing, had the properties of wolves, that is, they could whine and howl, as well as bite and devour. South, Serm.

I was not born so base to flatter crouds,
And move your pity by a whining tale. Dryden, Don Sebast.

Laughing at their whining may perhaps be the proper method. Locke.

Life was given for noble purposes; and therefore it must not be sacrificed to a quarrel, nor whined away in love. Collier.

Upon a general mourning, mercers and woollen-drapers would in four-and-twenty hours raise their cloths and silks to above a double price; and, if the mourning continued long, come whining with petitions to the court, that they were ready to starve. Swift.

Whine. n. s. [from the verb.] Plaintive noise; mean or affected complaint.

The favourable opinion of men comes oftentimes by a few demure looks and affected whines, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces. South.

Thy hateful whine of woe
Breaks in upon my sorrows, and distracts
My jarring senses with thy beggar's cry. Rowe, J. Shore.

Whi'ner.* n. s. [from whine.] One who whines.

One pitiful whiner, Melpomene.
Gayton, Notes on D. Quix. p. 242.

Whi'nny.* adj. [from whin.] Abounding with whins.

Gateskale being a whinny place.
Nicolson and Burn, Westm. and Cumb. ii. 319.

To Whi'nny.† v. n. [hinnio, Lat. from the sound.] To make a noise like a horse or colt.

The horse — while he is whinneying.
More, Immort. of the Soul, i. i. 13.

Whi'nyard. n. s. [pinnan and ape, to gain honour, Saxon. Skinner. I know not whether this word was ever used seriously, and therefore perhaps it might be denominated in contempt from whin, a tool to cut whins.] A sword: in contempt.

He snatch'd his whinyard up, that fled
When he was falling off his steed. Hudibras.

To WHIP. v. a. [hpeopan, Saxon; wippen, Dutch.]

1. To strike with any thing tough and flexible.

He took
The harness'd steeds, that still with horror shook,
And plies them with the lash, and whips 'em on;
And, as he whips, upbraids 'em with his son. Addison.

2. To sew slightly.

In half whipt muslin needles useless lie. Gay.

3. To drive with lashes.

This unheard sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories. Shakspeare, K. John.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again;
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Since I pluckt geese, play'd truant, and whipt top, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten till lately. Shakspeare.

If ordered every day to whip his top, so long as to make him weary, he will wish for his book, if you promise it him as a reward of having whipt his top lustily quite out. Locke.

Whipt cream; unfortify'd with wine or sense!
Froth'd by that slattern-muse, Indifference. Harte.

4. To correct with lashes.

I'll leave you to the hearing of the cause,
Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all. Shakspeare.

Reason with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this,
Lest you should chance to whip your information. Shakspeare.

Hourly we see some raw pin-feather'd thing
Attempt to mount, and fights and heroes sing,
Who for false quantities was whipt at school
But t'other day, and breaking grammar-rule. Dryden.

How did he return this haughty brave,
Who whipt the winds, and made the sea his slave? Dryden.

This requires more than setting children a task, and whipping them without any more ado, if it be not done to our fancy. Locke.

Oh chain me! whip me! let me be the scorn
Of sordid rabbles and insulting crowds!
Give me but life. Smith, Phædra and Hippol.

Heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and are not able to bear the pain and indignity of whipping. Swift.

5. To lash with sarcasm.

They would whip me with their fine wits, till I was as crest-fallen as a dried pear. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

6. To inwrap.

Its string is firmly whipt about with small gut, that it may the easier move in the edge of the rowler. Moxon, Mech. Ex.

7. To take any thing nimbly: always with a particle ascertaining the sense; as, out, on, up, away. A ludicrous use.

In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
He whipt his rapier out, and cries, a rat!
And in this brainish apprehension kills
The unseen good old man. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

She in a hurry whips up her darling under her arm. L'Estrange.

Raise yourself upon your hinder legs, and then stretch out your head: I can easily whip up to your horns, and so out of the well. L'Estrange.

Brisk Susan whips her linen from the rope,
Whilst the first drizz'ling show'r is born aslope. Swift.

Thus disposed, it lies ready for you to whip it out in a moment. Swift.

To Whip. v. n. To move nimbly. A ludicrous word.

Two friends travelling together, met a bear upon the way: the one whips up a tree, and the other throws himself flat upon the ground. L'Estrange.

The simple 'squire made a sudden start to follow; but the justice of the quorum whipped between. Tatler.

Whip. n. s. [hpeop, Sax.] An instrument of correction tough and pliant.

There sat infernal pain,
And fast beside him sat tumultuous strife;
The one in hand an iron whip did strain,
The other brandished a bloody knife. Spenser.

Put in ev'ry honest hand a whip,
To lash the rascal naked through the world. Shakspeare, Othello.

Love is merely madness, and deserves as well a dark-house and a whip as madmen do. Shakspeare.

High on her head she rears two twisted snakes;
Her chain she rattles, and her whip she shakes. Dryden.

In his right hand he holds the whip with which he is supposed to drive the horses of the sun. Addison.

Whip and spur. With the utmost haste.

Each staunch polemick
Came whip and spur, and dash'd thro' thin and thick. Pope

Whi'pcord. n. s. [whip and cord.] Cord of which lashes are made.

In Raphael's first works are many small foldings, often repeated, which look like so many whipcords. Dryden.

Whi'pgrafting. n. s. [In gardening.] A kind of grafting.

Whi'phand. n. s. [whip and hand.] Advantage over.

The archangel, when discord was restive, and would not be drawn from her beloved monastry with fair words, has the whiphand of her, and drags her out with many stripes. Dryden.

Whi'plash. n. s. The lash or small end of a whip.

Have whiplash wel knotted and cartrope inough. Tusser.

Whi'pper. n. s. [from whip.] One who punishes with whipping.

Love is merely a madness, and deserves as well a dark-house and a whip as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished is, that the whippers are in love too. Shakspeare.

Whi'pping.* n. s. [from whip.] Correction with a whip or rod.

Let it be with us, as with some good-natured children, whom I have seen even after their whippings unquiet, till with their continued tears and importunities they have made their peace with their offended parent. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 108.

Whi'ppingpost. n. s. [whip and post.] A pillar to which criminals are bound when they are lashed.

Could not the whippingpost prevail,
With all its rhet'rick, nor the jail,
To keep from flaying scourge thy skin,
And ankle free from iron gin? Hudibras.

Whi'psaw. n. s. [whip and saw.]

The whipsaw is used by joiners to saw such great pieces of stuff that the handsaw will not easily reach through. Moxon.

Whi'pstaff. n. s. [On shipboard.] A piece of wood fastened to the helm, which the steersman holds in his hand to move the helm and turn the ship. Bailey.

Whi'pster. n. s. [from whip.] A nimble fellow.

I am not valiant neither;
But ev'ry puny whipster gets my sword. Shakspeare, Othello.

Give that whipster but his errand,
He takes my lord chief justice' warrant. Prior.

Whi'pstock.* n. s. [whip and stock.] The handle of a whip; the whip itself.

By his rusty outside he appears
To have practis'd more the whipstock than the lance. Shakspeare, Pericles.

Phebus when
He broke his whipstock, and exclaim'd against
The horses of the sun, but whisper'd, to
The loudness of his fury. Beaum. and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

Whipt, for whipped.

In Bridewel a number be stript,
Lesse worthie than theefe to be whipt. Tusser.

To Whir. } v. n. [of the same origin as whirl;
To Whi'rry. } which see. Dr. Johnson notices whirring as an adjective, with the example from Pope; but mistakenly calls it a word formed in imitation of the sound expressed by it.] To turn round rapidly, with noise: a bird that flies with a quick motion, accompanied with noise, is still said to whir away. See Steevens and Malone on Shakspeare's Pericles.

Gathering dust with whirring fiercely round. Chapman, Il. 14.

They rapt — the whirring chariot. Chapman, Il. 17.

Through pools and ponds
I whirry. Old Ballad of Robin Goodfellow.

Now from the brake the whirring pheasant springs. Pope.

To Whir. v. a. To hurry. The following is the original reading. Malone.

This world to me is like a lasting storm,
Whirring me from my friends. Shakspeare, Pericles.

To WHIRL.† v. a. [whirla, Icel. turbine versari continuo: consent. linguis Septentr. Sic hwairban, M. Goth. transire, ab antiquiss. Scyth. yrra, whirra, sursum et deorsum ferri. Serenius, and Callander.] To turn round rapidly.

My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel:
I know not where I am, nor what I do. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

He whirls his sword around without delay,
And hews through adverse foes an ample way. Dryden.

With his full force he whirl'd it first around;
But the soft yielding air receiv'd the wound. Dryden.

The Stygian flood,
Falling from on high, with bellowing sound,
Whirls the black waves and rattling stones around. Addison.

With impetuous motion whirl'd apace,
This magick wheel still moves, yet keeps its place. Granville.

They have ever been taught by their senses, that the sun, with all the planets and the fixed stars, are whirled round this little globe. Watts, Impr. of the Mind.

To Whirl. v. n.

1. To run round rapidly.

He, rapt with whirling wheels, inflames the skyen,
With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shine. Spenser.

Five moons were seen to-night,
Four fixed, and the fifth did whirl about
The other four in wond'rous motion. Shakspeare, K. John.

As young striplings whip the top for sport
On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about,
Admir'd with clamours of the beardless rout. Dryden.

Wild and distracted with their fears,
They justling plunge amidst the sounding deeps;
The flood away, the struggling squadron sweeps,
And men and arms, and horses whirling bears. Smith.

2. To move hastily.

She what he swears regards no more
Than the deaf rocks when the loud billows roar;
But whirl'd away, to shun his hateful sight,
Hid in the forest. Dryden, Æn.

Whirl.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Gyration; quick rotation; circular motion; rapid circumvolution.

What flaws and whirls of weather,
Or rather storms, have been aloft these three days! Beaum. and Fl. Pilgrim.

'Twere well your judgments but in plays did range;
But ev'n your follies and debauches change
With such a whirl, the poets of your age
Are tir'd, and cannot score them on the stage. Dryden.

Wings raise my feet; I'm pleas'd to mount on high,
Trace all the mazes of the liquid sky;
Their various turnings and their whirls declare,
And live in the vast regions of the air. Creech, Manil.

Nor whirl of time, nor flight of years can waste. Creech.

I have been watching what thoughts came up in the whirl of fancy, that were worth communicating. Pope.

How the car rattles, how its kindling wheels
Smoke in the whirl: the circling sand ascends,
And in the noble dust the chariot's lost. Smith.

2. Any thing moved with rapid rotation.

For though in dreadful whirls we hung
High on the broken wave,
I knew thou wert not slow to hear,
Nor impotent to save. Addison, Spect.

WHI'RLBAT. n. s. [whirl and bat.] Any thing moved rapidly round to give a blow. It is frequently used by the poets for the ancient cestus.

At whirlbat he had slain many, and was now himself slain by Pollux. L'Estrange.

The whirlbat's falling blow they nimbly shun,
And win the race ere they begin to run. Creech, Manil.

The guardian angels of kingdoms he rejected, as Dares did the whirlbats of Eryx, when they were thrown before him by Entellus. Dryden.

The whirlbat and the rapid race shall be Reserv'd for Cæsar, and ordain'd by me. Dryden, Virg.

WHI'RLBONE. n. s. The patella; the cap of the knee. Ainsworth.

WHI'RLIGIG.† n. s. [whirl and gig.] A toy which children spin round.

That men should have such whirle-gigs in their brain!
Mountagu, App. to Cæs. (1625,) p. 81.

He found that marbles taught him percussion, and whirligigs the axis in peritrochio. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

That since they gave things their beginning,
And set this whirligig a-spinning. Prior.

WHI'RLPIT. / WHI'RLPOOL. } n. s. [hpyppole, Saxon.] A place where the water moves circularly, and draws whatever comes within the circle towards its centre; a vortex.

Poor Tom! whom the foul fiend hath led through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

In the fathomless profound
Down sunk they, like a falling stone,
By raging whirlpits overthrown. Sandys.

This calm of heaven, this mermaid's melody,
Into an unseen whirlpool draws you fast,
And in a moment sinks you. Dryden, Span. Friar.

Send forth, ye wise! send forth your lab'ring thought:
Let it return with empty notions fraught,
Of airy columns every moment broke,
Of circling whirlpools, and of spheres of smoke. Prior.

There might arise some vertiginous motions or whirlpools in the matter of the chaos, whereby the atoms must be thrust and crowded to the middle of those whirlpools, and there constipate one another into great solid bodies. Bentley.

WHI'RLWIND. n. s. [werbelwind, German.] A stormy wind moving circularly.

In the very torrent and whirlwind of your passion, beget a temperance that may give it smoothness. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

With whirlwinds from beneath she toss'd the ship,
And bare expos'd the bosom of the deep. Dryden, Æn.

WHI'RRING.† See To WHIR.

WHISK.† n. s. [wischen, to wipe, German.]

1. A small besom, or brush.

The white of an egg, though in part transparent, yet, being long agitated with a whisk or spoon, loses its transparency. Boyle.

If you break any china with the top of the whisk on the mantle-tree, gather up the fragments. Swift.

2. A part of a woman's dress.

An easy means to prevent being one farthing the worse for the abatement of interest, is wearing a lawn whisk instead of a point de Venice. Child of Trade.

3. A quick violent motion; and hence perhaps a sudden gale. Malone.

One showre of haile with sudden whiske
Makes all not worth a pin. Turbervile, Tr. of Mantuan, (1567.)

This first sad whisk
Takes off thy dukedom. Beaum. and Fl. Nob. Gentleman.

To WHISK.† v. a. [wischen, to wipe, German.]

1. To sweep with a small besom.

For I suppose that he is
Of Jeremy the whisking rod;
The flayle, the scourge,
Of Almighty God. Skelton, Poems, p. 174.

2. To move nimbly, as when one sweeps.

He whisk'd his party-coloured wings,
And down to earth he comes. Ralegh.

With the whisking of my sword about,
I take thy honours off; this first sad whisk
Takes off thy dukedom; thou art but an earl.
Beaum. and Fl. Nob. Gentleman.

To WHISK.* v. n. To move with velocity.

Here you might have heard the whisking winds.
Purchas, Pilgr. (1617,) p. 83.

Cardan believ'd great states depend
Upon the tip o' th' bear's tail's end;
That as she whisk'd it t'wards the sun,
Strow'd mighty empires up and down. Hudibras.

A strange gentleman whisk'd by me. Addison, Drummer.

WHI'SKER. n. s. [from whisk.] The hair growing on the upper lip or cheek unshaven; a mustachio.

A sacrifice to fall of state,
Whose thread of life the fatal sisters
Did twist together with its whiskers. Hudibras.

Behold four kings in majesty rever'd,
With hoary whiskers and a forky beard. Pope.

A painter added a pair of whiskers to the face. Addison.

WHI'SKERED.* adj. Formed into whiskers.

Preferring sense from chin that's bare,
To nonsense thron'd in whisker'd hair.
Green, Poem of the Spleen.

WHI'SKY.* n. s. The word whisky signifies water, and is applied by way of eminence to strong water, or distilled liquor. The spirit drunk in the north is drawn from barley. Dr. Johnson, Journ. West. Isl. See also USQUEBAUGH.

To WHI'SPER. v. n. [wisperen, Dutch.] To speak with a low voice, so as not to be heard but by the ear close to the speaker; to speak with suspicion or timorous caution.

All that hate me whisper together against me. Ps. xli. 7.

In speech of man, the whispering or susurrus, whether louder or softer, is an interiour sound; but the speaking out is an exteriour sound, and therefore you can never make a tone, nor sing in whispering; but in speech you may. Bacon.

The king Acestis calls;
Then softly whisper'd in her faithful ear,
And bade his daughters at the rites appear. Pope.

It is as offensive to speak wit in a fool's company, as it would be ill manners to whisper in it: he is displeased at both, because he is ignorant of what is said. Pope.

The hollow whispering breeze, the pliant rills
Purl down amid the twisted roots. Thomson.

To WHI'SPER. v. a.

1. To address in a low voice.

When they talk of him, they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear. Shakspeare, K. John.

Give sorrow words; the grief that does not speak,
Whispers the o'erfraught heart, and bids it break. Shakspeare.

He first whispers the man in the ear, that such a man should think such a card. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The steward whispered the young Templar, That's true to my knowledge. Tatler.

2. To utter in a low voice.

You have heard of the news abroad, I mean the whisper'd ones; for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments. Shakspeare.

Sit and eat your bread,
Nor whisper more a word; or get ye gone,
And weepe without doors. Chapman.

They might buzz and whisper it one to another, and, tacitly withdrawing from the apostles, noise it about the city. Bentley.

3. To prompt secretly.

Charles the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
For 'twas indeed his colour, but he came
To whisper Wolsey, here makes visitation.
Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

WHI'SPER. n. s. [from the verb.] A low soft voice; cautious and timorous speech.

The extension is more in tones than in speech; therefore the inward voice or whisper cannot give a tone. Bacon.

Strictly observe the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in the heart, and this will keep conscience quick and vigilant. South.

Soft whispers through th' assembly went. Dryden.
He uncall'd, his patron to control,
Divulg'd the secret whispers of his soul. Dryden.

With such like false whispers, in former reigns, the ears of princes have been poisoned. Davenant.

WHI'SPERER.† n. s. [from whisper.]

1. One that speaks low.

St. Gregory had no meaner whisperer, under the shape of a pigeon, sitting quietly upon his head.
Brevint, Saul and Sam. at End. p. 47.

2. A private talker; a teller of secrets; a conveyer of intelligence.

Kings' trust in eunuchs hath rather been as to good spials and good whisperers, than good magistrates. Bacon.

WHI'SPERING.* n. s. [from whisper.] Act of speaking in a low voice; cautious speech.

The court and city were full of whisperings and expectation of some sudden change. Sidney.

In speech of man, the whispering, or susurrus, whether louder or softer, is an interiour sound. Bacon.

God comes, not only within the ken of our necessities, but within the hearing of the softest whisperings of our prayers.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 95.

Birds will bear thy whisperings on their wings.
Sandys, Paraphr. Eccl.

WHI'SPERINGLY.* adv. [from whispering.] In a low voice.

The one is uttered vocally, the other whisperingly.
Dalgarno, Deaf and Dumb Man's Tutor, p. 107.

To WHIST.† v. a. [this word is called by Skinner, who seldom errs, an interjection commanding silence, and so it is commonly used; but Shakspeare uses it as a verb, and Milton as an adjective or a participle. Dr. Johnson. — It is certainly a verb; and was formerly common; as the examples now added to those from Shakspeare and Milton, show. It is probably from hush, whence hust in Chaucer, and hist in present use.] To silence; to still.

So was the Titaness put downe and whist. Spenser, F. Q.
The ayre is cleere, and southerne windes are whist.
Marlow and Nash's Dido, 1594.
The wild waves whist, (i. e. being stilled.)
Shakspeare, Tempest.
In dead of night, when all was whist and still.
Sandys, Ov. Met. B. i.

The winds with wonder whist,
Smoothly the waters kiss'd,
Whispering new joys to the mild ocean. Milton, Ode Nat.

To WHIST.* v. n. To become silent.

They whisted all. Ld. Surrey and Phaer, Tr. of Virg. Æn. 2.

WHIST.† interj. Be still: be silent.

Whist, wanton, still ye. Lodge, Euphues's Golden Legacie.

WHIST.† n. s. A game at cards, requiring close attention and silence; vulgarly pronounced whisk. Dr. Johnson. — The earliest notice I have yet found of this game is in the following example. Malone.

But what was this? a game at whist
Unto our Plowden canonist.
Second Part of Hudibras, (spurious,) 1663.

The clergyman used to play at whist and swobbers. Swift.

Whist awhile
Walks his grave round beneath a cloud of smoke,
Wreath'd fragrant from the pipe. Thomson, Autumn.

To WHI'STLE. v. n. [hpiſtlan, Saxon; fistula, Latin.]

1. To form a kind of musical sound, by an inarticulate modulation of the breath.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard:
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle. Shakspeare.

Let one whistle at the one end of a trunk, and hold your ear at the other, and the sound shall strike so sharp as you can scarce endure it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

While the plowman near at hand
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land. Milton, L'All.

Should Bertran sound his trumpets,
And Torrismond but whistle through his fingers,
He draws his army off. Dryden, Span. Friar.

He whistled as he went for want of thought. Dryden.

The ploughman leaves the task of day,
And trudging homeward whistles on the way. Gay.

2. To make a sound with a small wind-instrument.

3. To sound shrill.

His big manly voice
Changing again toward childish treble pipes,
He whistles in his sound. Shakspeare.

Soft whispers run along the leafy woods,
And mountains whistle to the murm'ring floods. Dryden.

Rhætus from the hearth a burning brand
Selects, and whirling waves; till from his hand
The fire took flame, then dash'd it from the right
On fair Charaxus' temples, near the sight
Then whistling past came on. Dryden.

When winged deaths in whistling arrows fly,
Wilt thou, though wounded, yet undaunted stay,
Perform thy part, and share the dangerous day. Prior.

The wild winds whistle, and the billows roar,
The splitting raft the furious tempest tore. Pope.

To WHI'STLE. v. a. To call by a whistle.

Let him whistle them backwards and forwards, till he is weary. South, Serm.

He chanc'd to miss his dog: we stood still till he had whistled him up. Addison.

When simple pride for flatt'ry makes demands,
May dunce by dunce be whistled off my hands. Pope.

WHI'STLE. n. s. hpiſtle, Saxon.]

1. Sound made by the modulation of the breath in the mouth.

My sire in caves constrains the winds;
Can with a breath their clamorous rage appease;
They fear his whistle, and forsake the seas. Dryden.

2. A sound made by a small wind-instrument.

3. The mouth; the organ of whistling.

Let's drink the other cup to wet our whistles, and so sing away all sad thoughts. Walton, Angler.

4. A small wind-instrument.

The masters and pilots were so astonished, that they knew not how to direct; and if they knew, they could scarcely, when they directed, hear their own whistle. Sidney.

Behold,
Upon the hempen tackle shipboys climbing;
Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give
To sounds confus'd. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Small whistles, or shepherds' oaten pipes, give a sound, because of their extreme slenderness, whereby the air is more pent than in a wider pipe. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew,
The bells she jingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

5. The noise of winds.

6. A call, such as sportsmen use to their dogs.

Madam, here comes my lord.
— I have been worth the whistle. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The knight, pursuing this epistle,
Believ'd he'd brought her to his whistle. Hudibras.

WHI'STLER. n. s. [from whistle.] One who whistles.

The prize was a guinea, to be conferred upon the ablest whistler, who could whistle clearest, and go through his tune without laughing. Addison.

WHI'STLY.* adv. [from To whist.] Silently.

I, upon a little rising hill,
Stood wistly watching for the herd's approach.
Arden of Feversham, (1599.)

WHIT. n. s. [þiht, a thing; aþiht, any thing, Sax.] A point; a jot.

We love, and are no whit regarded. Sidney.

Her sacred book, with blood ywrit,
That none could read, except she did him teach;
She unto him disclosed every whit,
And heavenly documents thereout did preach. Spenser.

The motive cause of doing it is not in ourselves, but carrieth us as if the wind should drive a feather in the air; we no whit furthering that whereby we are driven. Hooker.

Although the lord became the king's tenant, his country was no whit reformed thereby, but remained in the former barbarism. Davies on Ireland.

Nature's full blessings would be well dispens'd
In unsuperfluous, even proportion,
And she no whit encumber'd with her store. Milton, Comus.

It does not me a whit displease,
That the rich all honours seize. Cowley.

In account of ancient times it ought to satisfy any enquirer, if they can be brought any whit near one another. Tillotson.

It is every whit as honourable to assist a good minister, as to oppose a bad one. Addison, Freeholder.

WHITE.† adj. [hpit, Saxon; wit, Dutch; hweits, M. Goth. consent. linguis cognatis. Serenius.]

1. Having such an appearance as arises from the mixture of all colours; snowy.

When the paper was held nearer to any colour than to the rest, it appeared of that colour to which it approached nearest; but when it was equally, or almost equally distant from all the colours, so that it might be equally illuminated by them all, it appeared white. Newton, Opt.

Why round our coaches crowd the white-glov'd beaus? Pope.

2. Having the colour of fear; pale.

— My hands are of your colour, but I shame
To wear a heart so white. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. Having the colour appropriated to happiness and innocence.

Welcome, pure-ey'd faith, white-handed hope:
Thou hovering angel girt with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity. Milton, Comus.

Wert thou that sweet-smiling youth?
Or that crown'd matron, sage, white-robed truth?
Milton, Ode.

Let this auspicious morning be exprest
With a white stone distinguish'd from the rest;
White as thy fame, and as thy honour clear,
And let new joys attend on thy new-added year. Dryden.

To feastful mirth be this white hour assign'd,
And sweet discourse, the banquet of the mind. Pope.

Peace o'er the world her olive-wand extend,
And white-rob'd innocence from heaven descend. Pope.

4. Grey with age.

I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd,
Your high-engender'd battles 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

So minutes, hours, and days, weeks, months, and years
Past over, to the end they were created,
Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave. Shakspeare.

5. Pure; unblemished; unclouded.

Was not the first man by the desire of knowledge corrupted even in the whitest integrity of nature? Donne, Parad. 8.

Figurative expressions of some white and gladsome days shortly to succeed. Spencer on Prod. p. 153.

Unhappy Dryden! in all Charles's days,
Roscommon only boasts unspotted lays:
And in our own, excuse some courtly stains,
No whiter page than Addison's remains. Pope.

WHITE. n. s.

1. Whiteness; any thing white; white colour.

My Nun shall be the queen of all the fairies,
Finely attired in a robe of white. Shakspeare.

A friend coming to visit me, I stopp'd him at the door, and before I told him what the colours were, or what I was doing, I asked him which of the two whites were the best, and wherein they differed? and after he had at that distance view'd them well, he answer'd, that they were both good whites, and that he could not say which was best, nor wherein their colours differ'd. Newton, Opt.

2. The mark at which an arrow is shot, which used to be painted white.

If a mark be set up for an archer at a great distance, let him aim as exactly as he can, the least wind shall take his arrow, and divert it from the white. Dryden.

Remove him then, and all your plots fly sure,
Point blank, and level to the very white
of your designs. Southern.

3. The albugineous part of eggs.

I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs
T' apply to's bleeding face. Shakspeare.

The strongest repellents are the whites of new-laid eggs beaten to a froth, with alum. Wiseman, Surgery.

When fates among the stars do grow,
Thou into the close nests of time dost peep;
And there with piercing eye,
Through the firm shell and the thick white dost spy
Years to come a forming lie,
Close in their sacred secundine asleep. Cowley.

What principle manages the white and yolk of an egg into such a variety of textures, as is requisite to fashion a chick? Boyle.

The two in most regions represent the yolk and the membrane that lies next above it; so the exterior region of the earth is as the shell of the egg, and the abyss under it as the white that lies under the shell. Burnet.

4. The white part of the eye.

Our general himself
Sanctifies himself with's hands,
And turns up the white o' th' eye to his discourse. Shakspeare.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye, doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up as a hillock above its convexity. Ray.

To WHITE.† v. a. [from the adjective.] To make white; to dealbate; to whitewash.

His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them. St. Mark, ix. 3.

Like unto whited sepulchres, which appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones. St. Matt. xxiii.

Thou — dost never
Wear thy own face, but putt'st on his, and gather'st
Baits for his ears; liv'st wholly at his beck; —
Whit'st over all his vices. Beaum. and Fl. Bloody Brother.

WHITELE'AD. n. s.

White lead is made by taking sheet-lead, and having cut it into long and narrow slips, they make it up into rolls, but so that a small distance may remain between every spiral revolution. These rolls are put into earthen pots, so ordered that the lead may not sink down above half way, or some small matter more in them: these pots have each of them very sharp vinegar in the bottom, so full as almost to touch the lead. When the vinegar and lead have both been put into the pot, it is covered up close, and so left for a certain time; in which space the corrosive fumes of the vinegar will reduce the surface of the lead into a mere white calx, which they separate by knocking it with a hammer. There are two sorts of this sold at the colour shops, the one called ceruse, which is the most pure part, and the other is called white lead. Quincy.

Whi'telimed.* adj. [white and lime.] Covered with white plaister.

Ye white-lim'd walls. Titus Andronicus.

Whiteli'vered.† adj. [from white and liver.] Envious; malicious; cowardly.

Whi'tely. adj. [from white.] Coming near to white.

A whitely wanton, with a velvet brow,
With two pitch-balls stuck in her face for eyes. Shakspeare.
Now, governor, I see I must blush
Quite through this vail of night a whitely shame,
To think I could design to make those free,
Who were by nature slaves. Southern, Oroonoko.

Whi'temeat. n. s. [white and meat.] Food made of milk.

Much saltness in whitemeat is ill for the stone. Tusser.

The Irish banished into the mountains, lived only upon whitemeats. Spenser.

To Whi'ten. v. a. [from white.] To make white.

The smoke of sulphur will not black a paper, and is commonly used by women to whiten tiffanies. Brown.

Flax, the soil and climate are proper for whitening, by the frequency of brooks, and also of winds. Temple.

Women of my complexion ought to be more modest, especially since our faces debar us from all artificial whitenings. Guardian.

Striking her cliff, the storm confirms her pow'r;
The waves but whiten her triumphant shore. Prior.
Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skew'r to write;
In durance, exile, Bedlam, or the mint,
Like Lee or Budgell, I will rhyme and print. Pope.

To Whi'ten. v. n. To grow white.

The bark expects its freight;
The loosen'd canvas trembles with the wind,
And the sea whitens with auspicious gales. Smith.

Whi'tener. n. s. [from whiten.] One who makes any thing white.

Whi'teness. n. s. [from white.]

1. The state of being white; freedom from colour.

This doth lead me to her hand,
Of my first love the fatal band,
Where whiteness doth for ever sit;
Nature herself enamell'd it. Sidney.

Whiteness is a mean between all colours, having disposed itself indifferently to them all, so as with equal facility to be tinged with any of them. Newton, Opt.

2. Paleness.

Thou tremblest, and the whiteness of thy cheek,
Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand. Shakspeare.

3. Purity; cleanness.

The least spot is visible on ermine; but to preserve this whiteness in its original purity, you have, like that ermine, forsaken the common track of business, which is not always clean. Dryden.

Whi'tepot. n. s. A kind of food.

Cornwall squab-pye, and Devon whitepot brings. King.

Whites. n. s. [fluor albus.] It arises from a laxness of the glands of the uterus, and a cold pituitous blood. Quincy.

Whi'tethorn. n. s. [spina alba, Latin.] A species of thorn.

As little as a whitethorn and a pear-tree seem of kin, a cion of the latter will sometimes prosper well, being grafted upon a stock of the former. Boyle.

Whi'tewash. n. s. [white and wash.]

1. A wash to make the skin seem fair.

The clergy, during Cromwell's usurpation, were very much taken up in reforming the female world; I have heard a whole sermon against a whitewash. Addison.

2. A kind of liquid plaster with which walls are whitened.

Four rooms, above, below, this mansion grac'd,
With white-wash deckt, and river-sand o'er-cast. Harte.

Give so much light, that I may read by them. Shakspeare.
Turn him about,
I know him, he'll but whiz, and strait go out. Dryden.
Soon all with vigour bend their trusty bows,
And from the quiver each his arrow chose:
Hippocoon's was the first; with forceful sway
It flew, and whizzing cut the liquid way. Dryden.

WHIZ.* n. s. [from the verb.] A loud humming noise.

He never once ducked at the whiz of a cannon-ball. Guardian, No. 92.

WHO. pronoun. genitive whose; other cases whom. [hpa, Saxon; wie, Dutch.]

1. A pronoun relative, applied to persons.

We have no perfect description of it, nor any knowledge how, or by whom it is inhabited. Abbot.
Oft have I seen a timely-parted ghost,
Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,
Being all descended to the lab'ring heart,
Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the same for aidance 'gainst the enemy. Shakspeare.
Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present,
Whom I may rather challenge for unkindness,
Than pity for mischance. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,
Lives in the English court. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. Which of many.

A man can never be obliged to submit to any power, unless he can be satisfied, who is the person who has a right to exercise it. Locke.
We are still as much at a loss, who civil power belongs to. Locke.

3. As who should say, elliptically for as one who should say.

Hope throws a generous contempt upon ill usage, and looks like a handsome defiance of a misfortune: as who should say, you are somewhat troublesome now, but I shall conquer you. Collier against Despair.

4. Whose is the genitive of which, as well as of who, and is applied to things.

Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained. St. John, xx. 23.
The question whose solution I require,
Is what the sex of women most desire. Dryden.
Is there any other doctrine, whose followers are punished? Addison.

5. It has sometimes a disjunctive sense.

There thou tell'st of kings, and who aspire;
Who fall, who rise, who triumphs, who do moan. Daniel.
Tell who loves who; what favours some partake,
And who is jilted. Dryden.

6. It is used often interrogatively; as, who is this? meaning, what is the character or name of this person? Who shall do this? that is, where shall any be found that can do this?

Who is like unto the Lord? Psalms.
Who is this that darkneth counsel by words without knowledge? Job.
Who first seduc'd them to that dire revolt?
The infernal serpent. Milton.
Who feeds that alms-house neat, but void of state,
Where age and want sit smiling at the gate?
Who taught that heav'n-directed spire to rise?
The man of Ross; each lisping babe replies. Pope.

WHOE'VER. pronoun. [who and ever.] Any one, without limitation or exception.

Whoever doth to temperance apply
His stedfast life, and all his actions frame,
Trust me, shall find no greater enemy,
Than stubborn perturbation to the same. Spenser.
I think myself beholden, whoever shews me my mistakes. Locke.

Whoe'er thou art, that fortune brings to keep
The rights of Neptune, monarch of the deep;
Thee first it fits, O stranger, to prepare
The due libation, and the solemn prayer. Pope.
Whoever is really brave, has always this comfort when he is oppress'd, that he knows himself to be superior to those who injure him, by forgiving it. Pope.

WHOLE.† adj. [hal, Saxon; heel, Dutch. Serenius notices heill, Icel. hel, Sueth. integer, totus; oll, holh, Cambr. idem. This will lead us to the Greek ὅλος, the very same. Our word was formerly written hole.]

WHORE.† n. s. [hupe, Sax. hoere, Dutch; hore, Dan. hora, Su. Goth. hoera, Icel. Verelius observes that the Icel. word anciently signified a handmaid, ancilla; and changed its sense, like kona, a woman, olim uxor, hodie (queane) meretrix. Dr. Jamieson, in V. Hure. Mr. H. Tooke derives it from hypan, Sax. to hire; as Verstegan, long before, had done. So Serenius, from the Su. Goth. hyra, the same. Our old books and lexicography write this word hore. The old French language has hore in the same sense. Bishop Richardson contends for this spelling, hore being, he observes, from hire. Obs. on the O. Test. 1655. p. 157.]

1. A prostitute; a woman who receives men for money.

Orontes
Conveys his wealth to Tiber's hungry shores,
And fattens Italy with foreign whores. Dryden.

This cheat of life would take no more;
If you thought fame but empty breath;
Your Phyllis but a perjur'd whore. Prior.

2. A woman who converses unlawfully with men; a fornicatress; an adultress; a strumpet.

To put out the word whore, thou dost me woo,
Throughout my book; troth, put out woman too. B. Jonson.

To Whore.† v. a. To corrupt with regard to chastity.

Thou kept'st me brave at court, and whor'd me;
Then married me to a young noble gentleman,
And whor'd me still. Beaum. and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.

Here is another, justice will not spare;
An hot, lascivious, loose adulterer;
That whores his neighbour's wife, and makes him be
The laughing-stock of fools: — Cursed is he. Jordan's Poems, §§§ 8. b.

Have I whor'd your wife? Congreve.

To Whore. v. n. [from the noun.] To converse unlawfully with the other sex.

'Tis a noble general's prudent part,
To cherish valour, and reward desert:
Let him be daub'd with lace, live high, and whore;
Sometimes be lousy, but be never poor. Dryden.

Who'redom. n. s. [from whore.] Fornication.

Some let go whoredom as an indifferent matter, which yet strive for an holy-day, as for their life. Bp. Hall.

Nor can that person who accounts it his recreation to see one man wallowing in his filthy revels, and another infamous by his sensuality, be so impudent as to allege, that all the enormous draughts of the one can leave the least relish upon the tip of his tongue; or that all the fornications and whoredoms of the other can quench his own lust. South, Serm.

Who'remaster. } Who'remonger. } n. s. [whore and master, or monger.] One who keeps whores, or converses with a fornicatress.

What is a whoremaster, fool? a fool in good clothes and something like thee. Shakspeare.

As if we were drunkards, by a planetary influence; an admirable evasion of whoremaster man, to lay his goatish disposition on the change of a star. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Art thou fully persuaded that no whoremonger nor adulterer shall have any inheritance in the kingdom of God? and dost thou continue to practise these vices? Tillotson, Serm.

A rank notorious whoremaster, to choose,
To thrust his neck into the marriage noose. Dryden.

If he were jealous, he might clip his wife's wings: but what would this avail, when there were flocks of whoremasters perpetually hovering over his house. Addison, Guardian.

Wick. n. s. [peoce, Saxon; wiecke, Dutch.] The substance round which is applied the wax or tallow of a torch or candle.

But true it is, that when the oil is spent,
The light goes out, and wick is thrown away;
So, when he had resign'd his regiment,
His daughter gan despise his drooping day. Spenser.

There lives within the very flame of love
A kind of wick or snuff that will abate it. Shakspeare.

Bodies are inflamed wholly and immediately, without any wick to help the inflammation. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Little atoms of oil or melted wax continually ascend apace up the wick of a burning candle. Digby.

The fungous parcels about the wicks of candles only signifieth a moist and pluvious air about them. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Wi'cked.† adj. [Of this common word the etymology is very obscure: picca, is an enchanter; pæccan, is to oppress; pipian, to curse; piceð, is crooked: all these however Skinner rejects for vitiatus, Latin. Perhaps it is a compound of pic, vile, bad, and head, malum caput. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. H. Tooke makes wicked the same as witched, deriving it from the Sax. piccian, incantare, veneficiis uti. Div. of Purl. ii. 313. — Serenius would refer it to the Su. Goth. wika, to yield, to give way. Wick was our old word, as a substantive and adjective: "Pride is the worst of all wicke." Gower, Conf. Am. B. 1. "Beware, and leave thy wicke speche." Gower, Conf. Am. B. 2.]

1. Given to vice; not good; flagitious; morally bad.

The dwelling place of the wicked shall come to nought. Job, viii. 22.

And as the better spirit, when she doth bear
A scorn of death, doth shew she cannot die;
So when the wicked soul death's face doth fear,
Ev'n then she proves her own eternity. Davies.

He of their wicked ways shall them admonish. Milton, P. L.

But since thy veins paternal virtue fires,
Go and succeed! the rival's aims despise;
For never, never wicked man was wise. Pope, Odyss.

2. It is a word of ludicrous or slight blame.

That same wicked bastard of Venus, that blind rascally boy, that abuses every one's eyes because his own are out, let him be judge how deep I am in love. Shakspeare.

3. Cursed; baneful; pernicious; bad in effect; as, medicinal things are called virtuous.

The wicked weed which there the fox did lay,
From underneath his head he took away. Spenser.

As wicked dew as e'er my mother brush'd,
With raven's feather from unwholsome fen,
Drop on you both. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Wi'ckedly. adv. [from wicked.] Criminally; corruptly; badly.

I would now send him where they all should see,
Clear as the light his heart shine; where no man
Could be so wickedly or fondly stupid,
But should cry out, he saw, touch'd, felt wickedness,
And grasp'd it. B. Jonson.

He behaved himself with great modesty and wonderful repentance; being convinced in his conscience that he had done wickedly. Clarendon.

That thou may'st the better bring about
Thy wishes, thou art wickedly devout. Dryden.

'Tis phrase absurd to call a villain great:
Who wickedly is wise, or madly brave,
Is but the more a fool, the more a knave. Pope.

Wi'ckedness. n. s. [from wicked.] Corruption of manners; guilt; moral ill.

It is not good that children should know any wickedness; old folks have discretion and know the world. Shakspeare.

These tents thou saw'st so pleasant, were the tents
Of wickedness; wherein shall dwell his race
Who slew his brother. Milton, P. L.

Wi'cker.† adj. [vigre, Danish, a twig; from viger, to yield; or Teut. wicken, to shake; because of its pliant quality. Dr. Jamieson.] Made of small sticks.

Each one a little wicker basket had
Made of fine twigs, entrailed curiously;
In which they gather'd flow'rs. Spenser.

With plenteous rivers, and wide skirted meads,
We make thee lady. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

On the east-side of the garden place,
Cherubick watch; and of a sword the flame
Wide-waving; all approach far off to fright. Milton, P. L.

She open'd, but to shut;

With huge two-handed sway,
Brandish'd aloft, the horrid age came down,
Wide wasting. Milton, P. L.

The south wind rose, and with black wings,
Wide hovering all the clouds together drove
From under heaven. Milton, P. L.

Stretch'd at ease the panting lady lies,
To shun the fervour of meridian skies;
While sweating slaves catch ev'ry breeze of air,
And with wide-spreading fans refresh the fair. Gay.

Yet wide was spread their fame in ages past,
And poets once had promis'd they should last. Pope.

WI'DELY. adv. [from wide.]

1. With great extent each way.

Any that considers how immense the intervals of the chaos are, in proportion to the bulk of the atoms, will hardly induce himself to believe, that particles so widely disseminated could ever throng one another to a compact texture. Bentley.

2. Remotely; far.

Let him exercise the freedom of his reason, and his mind will be strengthened, and the light which the remote parts of truth will give to one another, will so assist his judgment, that he will seldom be widely out. Locke.

To WI'DEN. v. a. [from wide.] To make wide; to extend.

So now the gates are ope; now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers, fortune widens them,
Not for the flyers. Shakspeare, Coriol.

These accidents when they first happen, seem but small and contemptible; but by degrees they branch out and widen themselves into a numerous train of mischievous consequences. South.

He was accustomed to sleep with a peaceable nose, softening in his slumbers the wrinkles of it, and the anger which commonly mounted to that part; but now his nostrils were widened to the last degree of fury. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

To WI'DEN. v. n. To grow wide; to extend itself.

It is in this that the species of brutes are discriminated from man, and that proper difference, wherein they are wholly separated, and which at last widens to so vast a distance. Locke.

With her the temple ev'ry moment grew,
Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend;
And arches widen, and long isles extend. Pope.

WI'DENESS. n. s. [from wide.]

1. Breadth; large extent each way.

The rugged hair began to fall away;
The sweetness of her eyes did only stay,
Though not so large; her crooked horns decrease;
The wideness of her jaws and nostrils cease. Dryden.

2. Comparative breadth.

Within the same annual time, the centre of the earth is carried above fifty times as far round the orbis magnus, whose wideness we now assume to be twenty thousand terrestrial diameters. Bentley, Serm.

WI'DGEON.† n. s. [Serenius notices the Icel. ugda, ygda, certain birds named in the Edda.] A water-fowl not unlike a wild duck, but not so large.

Among the first sort we reckon creysers, curlews, and widgeon. Carew.

WI'DOW. n. s. [pidpa, Sax. weduwe, Dutch; weddw, Welsh; vidua, Latin.] A woman whose husband is dead.

To take the widow,
Exasperates, makes mad her sister Goneril. Shakspeare.

Catharine no more
Shall be call'd queen; but princess dowager,
And widow to prince Arthur. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd,
Your widow-dolours likewise be unwept. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

And will she yet debase her eyes on me,
That cropt the golden prime of this sweet prince,
And made her widow to a woeful bed? Shakspeare.

And you, fair widow, who stay here alive,
Since he so much rejoices, cease to grieve;
Your joys and pains were wont the same to be,
Begin not now, blest pair! to disagree. Cowley.

The barren they more miserable make,
And from the widow all her comfort take. Sandys.

He warns the widow, and her household gods,
To seek a refuge in remote abodes. Dryden.

Who has the paternal power whilst the widow queen is with child. Locke.

To WI'DOW. v. a. [from widow.]

1. To deprive of a husband.

In this city he
Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shakspeare, Coriol.
You are beguil'd;
Both you and I; for Romeo is exil'd:
He made you for a highway to my bed,
But I, a maid, die maiden widowed. Shakspeare.

Thy little care to mend my widow'd nights,
Has forc'd me to recourse of marriage rites,
To fill an empty side. Dryden.

2. To endow with a widow-right.

For his possessions,
Although by confiscation they are ours,
We do instate and widow you withal,
To buy you a better husband. Shakspeare.

3. To strip of any thing good.

The widow'd isle in mourning
Dries up her tears. Dryden.

Frosty blasts deface
The blithesome year, trees of their shrivell'd fruits
Are widow'd, dreary storms o'er all prevail. Philips.

WI'DOWER. n. s. [from widow.] One who has lost his wife.

The king, sealing up all thoughts of love under the image of her memory, remained a widower many years after. Sidney.

The main consents are had, and here we'll stay
To see our widower's second marriage-day. Shakspeare.

They that marry, as they that shall get no children; and they that marry not, as the widowers. 2 Esdr. xvi. 44.

WI'DOWHOOD. n. s. [from widow.]

1. The state of a widow.

Cecropia, having in her widowhood taken this young Artesia into her charge, had taught her to think that there is no wisdom but in including both heaven and earth in one's self. Sidney.

Ne ween my right with strength adown to tread,
Through weakness of my widowhood or woe,
For truth is strong. Spenser.

She employed her last widowhood to works no less bountiful than charitable. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

It is of greater merit wholly to abstain from things desirable, than after fruition to be content to leave them; as they who magnify single life prefer virginity much before widowhood. Wotton.

Cherish thy hasten'd widowhood with the gold
Of matrimonial treason: so farewell. Milton, S. A.

2. Estate settled on a widow. Not in use.

For that dow'ry, I'll assure her of
Her widowhood, be it that she survives me,
In all my lands. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

WIDOWHU'NTER. n. s. [widow and hunter.] One who courts widows for a jointure.

The widowhunters about town often afford them great diversion. Addison.

WIDOWMA'KER. n. s. [widow and maker.] One who deprives women of their husbands.

It grieves my soul
That I must draw this metal from my side
To be a widowmaker. Shakspeare, K. John.

WI'DOW-WAIL. n. s. [widow and wail.] A plant. Miller.

WIDTH. n. s. [from wide.] Breadth; wideness. A low word.

For the width of the mortess gage this side, then for the tennant, gage on that end of the quarter you intend the tennant shall be made. Moxon.

Let thy vines in intervals be set,
Indulge their width, and add a roomy space,
That their extremest lines may scarce embrace. Dryden.

To WIELD. v. a. [pealdan, Saxon, to manage in the hand.]

1. To use with full command, as a thing not too heavy for the holder.

His looks are full of peaceful majesty,
His head by nature fram'd to wear a crown,
His hand to wield a sceptre, and himself
Likely in time to bless a regal throne. Shakspeare.

'Mongst forests, hills, and floods, was ne'er such heave and shove,
Since Albion wielded arms against the son of Jove. Drayton.

There is that hand bolden'd to blood and war,
That must the sword in wond'rous actions wield. Daniel.

They are in the dark before they are aware; and then they make a noise only with terms; which, like too heavy weapons that they cannot wield, carry their strokes beyond their aim. Digby on Bodies.

The least of whom could wield
These elements, and arm him with the force
Of all their regions. Milton, P. L.

Part wield their arms, part curb the foaming steed. Milton, P. L.

If Rome's great senate could not wield that sword,
Which of the conquer'd world had made them lord;
What hope had ours, while yet their pow'r was new,
To rule victorious armies, but by you? Waller.

He worthiest, after him, his sword to wield,
Or wear his armour, or sustain his shield. Dryden.

2. To handle; in an ironical sense.

Base Hungarian wight, wilt thou the spigot wield. Shakspeare.

WIE'LDLESS.* adj. [wield and less.] Unmanageable.

That with the weight of his own weeldlesse might
He falleth nigh to ground, and scarse recovereth flight. Spenser, F. Q.

WIE'LDY.† adj. [from wield.] Manageable. Dr. Johnson. — Chaucer has once used it in the sense of active.

WI'ERY. adj. [from wire.]

1. Made of wire: it were better written wiry.

Your gown going off, such beauteous state reveals,
As when through flow'ry meads th' hill's shadow steals;
Off with that wiery coronet, and shew
The hairy diadem which on your head doth grow. Donne.

2. Drawn into wire.

Polymnia shall be drawn with her hair hanging loose about her shoulders, resembling wiery gold. Peacham on Drawing.

3. [From pæp, a pool.] Wet; wearish; moist. Obsolete.

Where but by chance a silver drop hath fall'n,
Ev'n to that drop ten thousand wiery friends
Do glew themselves in sociable grief. Shakspeare.

WIFE.† n. s. Plural wives. [pıf, Saxon; wiff, Dutch; wyf, Icel. mulier; sic dicta à waefwa, texere: Kona kalldest vyf af vefnandi, mulier adpellatur wyf à texendo: Edda. Serenius.]

1. A woman that has a husband.

There's no bottom, none
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The kings of Spain have been used to say, that they loved the East-Indies for their mistress only, in whose favours they could patiently enough endure a rival; but esteemed America as their wife, in whose love they could not brook a competitor without foul dishonour. Heylin.

The wife, where danger or dishonour lurks,
Safest and seemliest by her husband stays. Milton.

The wife her husband murders, he the wife. Dryden.

Fond of his friend, and civil to his wife. Pope.

2. It is used for a woman of low employment.

Strawberry wives lay two or three great strawberries at the mouth of their pot, and all the rest are little ones. Bacon.

WI'FEHOOD.* n. s. [wife and hood.] State and character of a wife.

She hath neither manners, honesty, behaviour,
Wifehood, nor womanhood. Beaum. and Fl. Tam. Tamed.

WI'FELESS.* adj. [wife and less.] Without a wife; unmarried. Prompt. Parv.

And sixty yeres a wifeless man was he.
Chaucer, March. Tale.

WIGHT. n. s. [piht. Saxon.] A person; a being. Now used only in irony or contempt.

Beshrew the witch! with venomous wight she stays,
Tedious as hell; but flies the grasps of love,
With wings more momentary swift than thought. Shakspeare.

This world below did need one wight,
Which might thereof distinguish every part. Davies.

This meaner wights, of trust and credit bare,
Not so respected, could not look t' effect. Daniel.

A wight he was whose very sight wou'd
Entitle him mirror of knighthood. Hudibras.

The water flies all taste of living wight. Milton.

How could'st thou suffer thy devoted knight,
On thy own day, to fall by foe oppress'd,
The wight of all the world who lov'd thee best. Dryden.

His station he yielded up to a wight as disagreeable as himself. Addison, Guardian.

In Fame's full bloom lies Florio down at night,
And wakes next day a most inglorious wight;
The tulip's dead. Young.

WIGHT.† adj. [wight signifies strong. Gibson. See WIGHT as an initial. But our wight seems to be from the Su. Goth. wig, agilis, alacer.] Swift; nimble; not out of use, as Dr. Johnson pronounces it; but in some parts of the north still used for active, swift. Grose notices weet or wite thus used also in the south.

He was so wimble and so wight,
From bough to bough he leaped light,
And oft the pumies latched. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

WIGHT. An initial in the names of men, signifies strong; nimble; lusty: being purely Saxon. Gibson's Camden.

WI'GHTLY. adv. [from wight.] Swiftly; nimbly.

Her was her, while it was day-light,
But now her is a most wretched wight;
For day that was is wightly past,
And now at last the night doth hast. Spenser.

WILD. adj. [pilb, Saxon; wild, Dutch.]

1. Not tame; not domestick.

For I am he, am born to tame you, Kate,
And bring you from a wild cat to a kate,
Conformable as other household kates. Shakspeare.

Winter's not gone yet, if the wild geese fly that way.
Shakspeare.

All beasts of the earth since wild. Milton.

2. Propagated by nature; not cultivated.

Whatsoever will make a wild tree a garden tree, will make a garden tree to have less core or stone. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Goose grass or wild tansy is a weed that strong clays are very subject to. Mortimer, Husbandry.

The wild bee breeds in the stocks of old willows, in which they first bore a canal, and furnish afterwards with hangings, made of rose leaves: and to finish their work divide the whole into several rooms or nests. Grew, Mus.

3. Desart; uninhabited.

The wild beast where he wons in forest wild. Milton.

4. Savage; uncivilized: used of persons, or practices.

Affairs that walk,
As they say spirits do, at midnight, have
In them a wilder nature than the business
That seeks dispatch by day. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Though the inundation destroyed man and beast generally, yet some few wild inhabitants of the woods escaped. Bacon.

When they might not converse with any civil men without peril of their lives, whither should they fly but into the woods and mountains, and there live in a wild and barbarous manner.
Davies on Ireland.

May those already curst Essexian plains,
Where hasty death and pining sickness reigns,
Prove as a desart, and none there make stay,
But savage beasts, or men as wild as they. Waller.

5. Turbulent; tempestuous; irregular.

His passions and his virtues lie confus'd,
And mixt together in so wild a tumult,
That the whole man is quite disfigur'd in him. Addison.

6. Licentious; ungoverned.

The barbarous dissonance
Of that wild rout that tore the Thracian bard. Milton.

Valour grown wild by pride, and power by rage,
Did the true charms of majesty impair:
Rome by degrees advancing more in age,
Show'd sad remains of what had once been fair. Prior.

7. Inconstant; mutable; fickle.

In the ruling passion, there alone,
The wild are constant, and the cunning known. Pope.

8. Inordinate; loose.

Other bars he lays before me,
My riots past, my wild societies. Shakspeare.

Besides, thou art a beau; what's that, my child?
A fop well-drest, extravagant and wild:
She that cries herbs has less impertinence,
And in her calling, more of common sense. Dryden.

9. Uncouth; strange.

What are these,
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants o' the earth,
And yet are on't. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

10. Done or made without any consistent order or plan.

With mountains, as with weapons arm'd; they make Wild work in heaven. Milton, P. L.

The sea was very necessary to the ends of providence, and would have been a very wild world had it been without.
Woodward, Nat. Hist.

11. Merely imaginary.

As universal as these appear to be, an effectual remedy might be applied: I am not at present upon a wild speculative project, but such a one as may be easily put in execution.
Swift.

WILD. n. s. [from the adjective.] A desart: a tract uncultivated and uninhabited.

Whereas the scorching sky
Doth singe the sandy wilds of spiceful Barbary. Drayton.

Forsook his easy couch at early day,
And to the wood and wilds pursu'd his way. Dryden.

Then Libya first, of all her moisture drain'd,
Became a barren waste, a wild of sand. Addison.

Is there a nation in the wilds of Africk,
Amidst the barren rocks and burning sands
That does not tremble at the Roman name? Addison.

You rais'd these hallow'd walls: the desert smil'd,
And paradise was open'd in the wild. Pope.

WILD Basil. n. s. [acinus, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

WILD Cucumber. n. s. [elaterium, Lat.] A plant.

The branches are somewhat like those of the cucumber; but have no tendrils; the fruit is prickly, and when ripe bursts with great elasticity, and abounds with fetid juice. Miller.

WILD Olive. n. s. [eleagnus, Latin, from ἐλαία, oliva, and ἄγνος, vitex.] This plant hath leaves like those of the chaste tree, and a fruit like an olive. Miller.

WILD Service. n. s. [cratægus, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

To WI'LDER. v. a. [from wild.] To lose or puzzle in an unknown or pathless tract.

The little courtiers, who ne'er come to know
The depth of factions, as in mazes go,
Where interests meet, and cross so oft, that they
With too much care are wildered in the way. Dryden.

Oh thou! who free'st me from my doubtful state,
Long lost and wilder'd in the maze of fate,
Be present still. Pope.

WI'LDERNESS. n. s. [from wild.]

1. A desert; a tract of solitude and savageness.

He travell'd through wide wasteful ground,
That nought but desert wilderness shew'd all around. Spenser.

When as the land she saw no more appear,
But a wild wilderness of waters deep,
Then gan she greatly to lament and weep. Spenser.

O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
When that my care could not with-hold thy riots,
What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?
O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,
Peopled with wolves thy old inhabitants! Shakspeare.

But who can always on the billows lie?
The wat'ry wilderness yields no supply. Waller.

All those animals have been obliged to change their woods and wildernesses for lodgings in cities. Arbuthnot and Pope.

The paths and bowers, doubt not, but our joint hands
Will keep from wilderness with ease. Milton.

WI'LDFIRE. n. s. [wild and fire.] A composition of inflammable materials, easy to take fire, and hard to be extinguished.

When thou rann'st up Gadshill in the night to catch my horse, I did think thou had'st been an ignis fatuus, or a ball of wildfire. Shakspeare.

Brimstone, pitch, wildfire,—though they burn cruelly, and are hard to quench, yet they make no such fiery wind as gunpowder doth. Bacon, Nat. Hist. No. 30.

Yet shall it in his boiling stomach turn
To bitter poison, and like wildfire burn;
He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd. Sandys.

No matter in the world so proper to write with as wildfire, as no characters can be more legible than those which are read by their own light. Addison, Guardian.

In flames, like Semele's, be brought to bed,
While opening hell spouts wildfire at your head. Pope.

WILDGOOSECHA'SE. n. s. A pursuit of something as unlikely to be caught as the wildgoose.

If our wits run the wildgoosechace, I have done; for thou hast more of the wildgoose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakspeare.

Let a man consider the time, money, and vexation, that this wildgoosechace has cost him, and then say what have I gotten to answer all this expence, but giddy frolick? L'Estrange.

WI'LDING. n. s. [wildelinghe, Dutch.] A wild sour apple.

Ten ruddy wildings in the wood I found,
And stood on tip-toes, reaching from the ground. Dryden.

The red streak, of all cyder fruit, hath obtained the preference, being but a kind of wilding, never pleasing to the palate. Mortimer.

The wilding's fibres are contriv'd
To draw th' earth's purest spirit, and resist
Its feculence. Philips.

5. Disposition; inclination; desire.

I make bold to press upon you with so little preparation.—
You're welcome; what's your will? Shakspeare.

He hath a will, he hath a power to perform. Drummond.

He said, and with so good a will to die,
Did to his breast the fatal point apply,
It found his heart. Dryden.

6. Power; government.

Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies. Psalms.

He had his will of his maid before he could go; he had the mastery of his parents ever since he could prattle; and why, now he is grown up, must he be restrained? Locke.

7. Divine determination.

I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground. The wills above be done; but I would fain die a dry death. Shakspeare.

8. Testament; disposition of a dying man's effects.

Another branch of their revenue still
Remains, beyond their boundless right to kill,
Their father yet alive, impower'd to make a will. Dryden.

Do men make their last wills by word of mouth only? Stephens, Serm.

9. GOOD-will. Favour; kindness.

I'll to the doctor, he hath my good-will,
And none but he to marry with Nan Page. Shakspeare.

10. GOOD-will. Right intention.

Some preach Christ of envy, and some of good-will. Phil. i. 15.

11. ILL-will. Malice; malignity.

WILL with a wisp. n. s. Jack with a lanthorn.

Will with the wisp is of a round figure, in bigness like the flame of a candle; but sometimes broader, and like a bundle of twigs set on fire. It sometimes gives a brighter light than that of a wax-candle; at other times more obscure, and of a purple colour. When viewed near at hand, it shines less than at a distance. They wander about in the air, not far from the surface of the earth; and are more frequent in places that are unctuous, mouldy, marshy, and abounding with reeds. They haunt burying places, places of execution, dunghills. They commonly appear in summer, and at the beginning of autumn, and are generally at the height of about six feet from the ground. Now they dilate themselves, and now contract. Now they go on like waves, and rain as it were sparks of fire; but they burn nothing. They follow those that run away, and fly from those that follow them. Some that have been catched were observed to consist of a shining, viscous, and gelatinous matter, like the spawn of frogs, not hot or burning, but only shining; so that the matter seems to be phosphorus, prepared and raised from putrified plants or carcasses by the heat of the sun; which is condensed by the cold of the evening, and then shines. Muschenbroek.

Will-a-wisp misleads night-faring clowns,
O'er hills and sinking bogs. Gay.

To WILL. v. a. [wiljan, Gothick; pillan, Saxon; willen, Dutch.]

1. To desire that any thing should be, or be done; or not be, or not be done.

To will, is to bend our souls to the having or doing of that which they see to be good. Hooker.

Let Richard be restor'd to his blood,
As will the rest; so willeth Winchester. Shakspeare.

I speak not of God's determining his own will, but his predetermining the acts of our will. There is as great difference betwixt these two, as betwixt my willing a lawful thing myself, and my inducing another man to do that which is unlawful. Hammond on Fundamentals.

Whosoever wills the doing of a thing, if the doing of it be in his power, he will certainly do it; and whosoever does not do that thing, which he has in his power to do, does not properly will it. South.

A man that sits still, is said to be at liberty, because he can walk if he wills it. Locke.

2. To be inclined or resolved to have.

She's too rough for me;
There, there, Hortensio, will you any wife? Shakspeare.

3. To command; to direct.

St. Paul did will them of Corinth, every man to lay up somewhat on the Sunday, and to reserve it in store for the church of Jerusalem, for the relief of the poor there. Hooker.

How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was willed to love his enemies? Shakspeare.

Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armours all as strong, our cause the best;
Then reason wills our hearts should be as good. Shakspeare.

He willed him to be of good comfort, promising to bestow upon him whatsoever he should win. Knolles.

If they had any business, his Majesty willed that they should attend. Clarendon.

'Tis your's, O queen! to will
The work, which duty binds me to fulfil. Dryden.

4. It has a loose and slight signification.

Let the circumstances of life be what, or where they will, a man should never neglect improvement. Watts.

5. It is one of the signs of the future tense; of which it is difficult to show or limit the signification.

I will come. I am determined to come, importing choice.

Thou wilt come. It must be so that thou must come, importing necessity; or it shall be that thou shalt come, importing choice.

Wilt thou come? Hast thou determined to come? importing choice.

He will come. He is resolved to come; or it must be that he must come, importing either choice or necessity.

It will come. It must so be that it must come; importing necessity.

The plural follows the analogy of the singular.

To WILL.* v. n. To dispose of effects by will.

The which willed in his testament. Brand, Pop. Antiq. ii. 214.

WI'LLER.* n. s. [from will.] One that wills.

Cast a glance on two considerations. 1. What the will is, to which 2d, who the willer is, to whom we must submit. Barrow, vol. iii. S. 4.

WI'LLI and Vili, among the English Saxons, as viele at this day among the Germans, signified many. So Willielmus is the defender of many; Wilfred, peace to many; which are answered in sense and signification by Polymachus, Polycrates, and Polyphilus. Gibson's Camden.

WI'LLING. adj. [from will.]

1. Inclined to any thing; consenting; not disposed to refuse.

Some other able, and as willing, pays
The rigid satisfaction. Milton.

Can any man trust a better support under affliction, than the friendship of Omnipotence, who is both able and willing, and knows how to relieve him? Bentley.

2. Pleased; desirous.

He willing to please one in authority, forced all his skill to make the resemblance of the best fashion. Wisdom.

He stoop'd with weary wings and willing feet. Milton.

3. Favourable; well disposed to any thing.

As many as were willing hearted brought bracelets and earrings. Ex. xxxv. 22.

4. Ready; complying.

Religion hath force to qualify all sorts of men, to make governors the apter to rule with conscience, inferiors for conscience sake the willinger to obey. Hooker.

We've willing dames enough. Shakspeare.

5. Chosen.

They're held with his melodious harmony,
In willing chains, and sweet captivity. Milton.

6. Spontaneous.

Forbear, if thou hast pity,
These groans proceed not from a senseless plant,
No spouts of blood run willing from a tree. Dryden.

7. Consenting.

How can hearts not free serve willing? Milton.

WI'LLINGLY. adv. [from will.]

1. With one's own consent; without dislike; without reluctance.

That preservation of peace and unity amongst Christian churches should be by all good means procured, we join most willingly and gladly with them. Hooker.

I dare not make myself so guilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your master wed me to. Shakspeare.

This ransom, if my whole inheritance,
May compass, it shall willingly be paid. Milton.

2. By one's own desire.

The condition of that people is not so much to be envied as some would willingly represent it. Addison.

WI'LLINGNESS. n. s. [from willing. Consent; freedom from reluctance; ready compliance.

We praise the things we hear with much more willingness, than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and overlaid by the other. B. Jonson.

It is not doing good after that same wonderful manner, that Christ's example obligeth us unto, but to a like willingness and readiness to do good as far as our power reacheth. Calamy.

For never yet a generous mind did gain;
We yield on parley; but are storm'd in vain;
Constraint, in all things, makes the pleasure less,
Sweet is the love which comes with willingness. Dryden.

WI'LLOW. n. s. [pelie, Saxon; salix, Lat. gwilou, Welsh.] A tree: of the boughs of which a garland was said to be worn by forlorn lovers.

It hath amentaceous flowers consisting of several stamina, which are collected into a spike, but are barren. The embryos are produced upon different trees from the male flowers, and afterwards become a fruit or husk, shaped like a cone, opening in two parts, and containing downy seeds. Miller.

I offered him my company to a willow tree, to make him a garland, as being forsaken, to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipt. Shakspeare.

In such a night
Stood Dido with a willow in her hand
Upon the wild sea-banks. Shakspeare.

Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
I wear the willow garland for his sake. Shakspeare.

When heaven's burning eye the fields invades,
To marshes he resorts, obscur'd with reeds,
And hoary willows, which the moisture feeds. Sandys.

Afflicted Israel shall sit weeping down,
Their harps upon the neighb'ring willows hung,
Nor joyous hymn encouraging their tongue. Prior.

Wi'llowed.* adj. [from willow.] Abounding with willows.

Or dwell in willow'd meads. Collins, Ode to Liberty.

Gentle river, gentle river,
Lo, thy streams are stain'd with gore,
Many a brave and noble captain
Floats along thy willow'd shore.
Bp. Percy, Tr. of Spanish Song.

Its river Glym, a deep but narrow stream, winding through willowed meadows, abounds in trouts, pikes, and wildfowl.
Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 25.

Wi'llowish. adj. [from willow.] Resembling the colour of willow.

Make his body with greenish coloured crewel, or willowish colour. Walton.

Wi'lloweed. n. s. [from willow and weed; lysimachia, Lat.] A plant. Ainsworth.

Wi'llowwort. n. s. A plant. Miller.

Wi'llowy.* adj. [from willow.] Abounding with willows.

Ye brown o'er-arching groves,
That contemplation loves,
Where willowy Camus lingers with delight!
Gray, Install. Ode.

Wi'lsome.* adj. [from will.] Obstinate; stubborn. A forgotten old word, but as proper as humoursome, and the like. It is in the Prompt. Parv. which has also wilsomeness or wylsomnesse for obstinacy.

Wi'ly. adj. [from wile.] Cunning; sly; full of stratagem; fraudulent; insidious; subtle; mischievously artful.

They are so cautelous and wily headed, especially being men of small practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilities and shifts. Spenser.

In the wily snake
Whatever slights, none would suspicions mark
As from his wit, and native subtilty
Proceeding. Milton, P. L.

Since this false, wily, doubling disposition of mind, is so intolerably mischievous to society, God is sometimes pleased, in mere compassion to men, to give them warning of it, by setting some odd mark upon such Cains. South.

My wily nurse by long experience found,
And first discover'd to my soul its wound;
'Tis love, said she. Dryden.

Wi'mble. adj. Active; nimble; shifting to and fro.

He was so wimble and so wight,
From bough to bough he leaped light,
And oft the pumics latched. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

WI'MBLE. n. s. [wimpel, old Dutch, from wemelen, to bore.] An instrument with which holes are bored.

At harvest-home, trembling to approach
The little barrel, which he fears to broach,
He essays the wimble, often draws it back,
And deals to thirsty servants but a smack. Dryden.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble some huge beam to bore;
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep-piercing till it scoops it out. Pope.

The trepan is like a wimble, used by joiners. Sharp.

To Wi'mble. v. a. [from the noun.] To bore.

The soldier — wimbled a hole into the coffin that was largest, probably fancying there was something well worthy his adventure. Sir T. Herbert, Mem. of K. Ch. I. p. 142.

WI'MPLE.† n. s. [guimple, Fr.] A hood; a veil.

So fair and fresh, as freshest flower in May,
For she had laid her mournful stole aside,
And widow-like sad wimple thrown away. Spenser, F. Q.

The Lord will take away the changeable suits of apparel, and the wimples, and the crisping-pins. Is. ii. 22.

The veil and the wimple were two different articles in the dress of a nun. Warton, Obs. on Spenser.

Wi'mple. n. s. [piplion, Lat.] A plant.

To Wi'mple.† v. a. [wimpelen, Teut. to veil.] To draw down as a hood or veil.

The same did hide,
Under a veil that wimpled was full low. Spenser.

Win. Whether initial or final in the names of men, may either denote a masculine temper, from pin, which signifies in Saxon, war, strength, &c. or else the general love and esteem he hath among the people; from the Saxon pine, i. e. dear, beloved. In the names of places it implies a battle fought there. Gibson.

To WIN.† v. a. pret. wan and won; part. pass. won. [pinna, Sax. winnen, Dutch; winna, Su. Goth. winnan, M. Goth.]

1. To gain by conquest.

Follow chearful to the trembling town;
Press but an entrance, and presume it won. Dryden.

2. To gain the victory in a contest.

Loyalty is still the same
Whether it win or lose the game:
True as the dial to the sun,
Altho' it be not shin'd upon. Hudibras.

I five years at Tarentum wan
The questorship, and then our love began. Denham.

Thy well breath'd horse
Impels the flying car, and wins the course. Dryden.

3. To gain something withheld, or something valuable.

When you see my son, tell him, that his sword can never win the honour that he loses. Shakspeare.

Resolv'd to win, he meditates the way,
By force to ravish, or by fraud betray. Pope.

4. To obtain; to allure to kindness or compliance.

Thy virtue wan me; with virtue preserve me. Dost thou love me? Keep me then still worthy to be beloved. Sidney.

Devilish Macbeth
By many of these trains hath sought to win me. Shakspeare.

5. To gain by play.

He had given a disagreeable vote in parliament, for which reason not a man would have so much correspondence with him as to win his money. Addison.

6. To gain by persuasion.

They win great numbers to receive
With joy the tidings brought from heaven. Milton.

7. To gain by courtship.

She's beautiful; and therefore to be woo'd:
She is a woman, therefore to be won. Shakspeare.

No tears, Celia, now shall win
My resolv'd heart to return,
I have search'd thy soul within,
And find nought but pride and scorn. Carew.

That flood witness'd his inconstant flame,
When thus he swore, and won the yielding dame. Gay.

To WIN. v. n.

1. To gain the victory.

Nor is it ought but just,
That he who in debate of truth hath won,
Should win in arms. Milton.

You have a softness and beneficence winning on the hearts of others. Dryden.

Thy words like musick every breast controul;
Steal thro' the air, and win upon the soul. Pope.

3. To gain ground.

The rabble will in time win upon power. Shakspeare.

4. To be conqueror or gainer at play.

Charles, I will play no more to-night;
My mind's not on't, you are too hard for me.
— Sir, I did never win of you before.
— But little, Charles;
Nor shall not when my fancy's on my play. Shakspeare.

To WINCE. v. n. [gwingo, Welsh.] To kick as impatient of a rider, or of pain.

I will sit as quiet as a lamb,
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word. Shakspeare.

Room, room, for my horse will wince,
If he came within so many yards of a prince. B. Jonson.

The angry beast did straight resent
The wrong done to his fundament,
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if h' had been beside his sense. Hudibras.

WI'NCER.† n. s. [from wince.] A kicking beast; one wincing as a beast.

A slovenly wincer of a confutation.
Milton, Apol. for Smectym. Pref.

WINCH. n. s. [guincher, French, to twist.] A windlace; something held in the hand by which a wheel or cylinder is turned.

Put a winch with the wheel. Mortimer.

To WINCH. v. a. [The same with wince, or perhaps from guincher, French, to twist; winch signifying sometimes to writhe or contort the body.] To kick with impatience; to shrink from any uneasiness.

We who have free souls,
It touches not, let the gall'd jade winch;
Our withers are unwrung. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Have these bones rattled, and this head
So often in thy quarrel bled!
Nor did I ever winch or grudge it. Hudibras.

This last allusion gall'd the panther more;
Yet seem'd she not to winch, though shrewdly pain'd. Dryden.

Their consciences are galled, and this makes them winch and fling, as if they had some mettle. Tillotson.

WINCH.* n. s. [from the verb.] A kick of a beast impatient of the rider or of pain.

The mule, frighted by that terrible blow, ran away as fast as it could about the fields, and within two or three winches overthrew him to the ground.
Shelton, Tr. of Don Quix. P. ii. ch. 1.

WI'NCOPIPE. n. s.

There is a small red flower in the stubble-fields, which country people call the wincopipe; which if it opens in the morning, you may be sure, a fair day will follow. Bacon.

WIND.† n. s. [pinb, Saxon; wind, Dutch; winds, M. Goth. wind, Icel. vox antiquiss. Celto-Scythica, ac fortè à simpliciori M. Goth. wajan, Germ. wehen, spirare. Serenius.]

1. Wind is when any tract of air moves from the place it is in, to any other, with an impetus that is sensible to us, wherefore it was not ill called by the antients, a swifter course of air; a flowing wave of air; a flux, effusion, or stream of air. Muschenbroek.

The worthy fellow is our general. He's the rock, the oak not to be wind shaken. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Love's heralds should be thoughts,
Which ten times faster glides than the sun beams,
Driving back shadows over low'ring hills.
Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love;
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings. Shakspeare.

Falmouth lieth farther out in the trade way, and so offereth a sooner opportunity to wind-driven ships than Plymouth. Carew.

Wind is nothing but a violent motion of the air, produced by its rarefaction, more in one place than another, by the sunbeams, the attractions of the moon, and the combinations of the earth's motions. Cheyne.

2. Direction of the blast from a particular point. As eastward; westward.

I'll give thee a wind.
I myself have all the other,
And the very points they blow;
All the quarters that they know
I' the shipman's card. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

In the year 1300, one Flavio of Malphi, in the realm of Naples, found out the compass, or pixis nautica, consisting of eight winds only, the four principal, and four collateral; and not long after, the people of Bruges and Antwerp perfected that excellent invention, adding twenty-four other subordinate winds or points. Heylin.

3. Breath; power or act of respiration.

If my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent. Shakspeare.

His wind he never took whilst the cup was at his mouth, but justly observ'd the rule of drinking with one breath. Hakewell.

The perfume of the flowers, and their virtues to cure shortness of wind in pursy old men, seems to agree most with the orange. Temple.

It stop'd at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to flitting air resign'd. Dryden.

4. Air caused by any action.

On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shakspeare.

In an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the sound-board breathes. Milton.

5. Breath modulated by an instrument.

Where the air is pent, there breath or other blowing, which carries but a gentle percussion, suffices to create sound; as in pipes and wind instruments. Bacon.

Their instruments were various in their kind;
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind. Dryden.

6. Air impregnated with scent.

A hare had long escap'd pursuing hounds,
By often shifting into distant grounds,
Till finding all his artifices vain,
To save his life, he leap'd into the main.
But there, alas! he could not safety find,
A pack of dog-fish had him in the wind. Swift.

7. Flatulence; windiness.

It turns
Wisdom to folly, as nourishment to wind. Milton.

8. Any thing insignificant or light as wind.

Think not with wind of aery threats to awe. Milton.

9. Down the WIND. To decay.

A man that had a great veneration for an image in his house, found that the more he prayed to it to prosper him in the world, the more he went down the wind still. L'Estrange.

10. To take or have the WIND. To gain or have the upperhand.

Let a king in council beware how he opens his own inclinations too much, for else counsellors will but take the wind of him; instead of giving free council. Bacon.

To WIND.† v. a. preter. wound; sometimes, though rarely, winded; part. wound. [pinban, Saxon; winden, Dutch; from the noun.]

1. To blow; to sound by inflation.

The squire 'gan nigher to approach,
And wind his horn under the castle wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall. Spenser.
I will have a recheat winded. Shakspeare, Much Ado.
Every Triton's horn is winding,
Welcome to the wat'ry plain. Dryden.
Ye vig'rous swains! while youth ferments your blood,
Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net. Pope.

2. To turn round; to twist.

Nero could touch and time the harp well; but in government sometimes he used to wind the pins too high, and sometimes let them down too low. Bacon.

The figure of a sturdy woman done by Michael Angelo, washing and winding of linen cloaths, in which act she wrings out the water that made the fountain. Wotton.

Wind the wood-bine round this arbour. Milton.

3. To regulate in motion; to turn to this or that direction.

He vaulted with such ease into his seat,
As if an angel dropt down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a firy pegasus,
And witch the world with noble horsemanship. Shakspeare.

4. To nose; to follow by scent.

In a commonwealth or realm,
The government is call'd the helm;
With which, like vessels under sail,
They're turn'd and winded by the tail. Hudibras

5. To ventilate. Prompt. Parv.

6. To turn by shifts or expedients.

Whence turning of religion's made
The means to turn and wind a trade. Hudibras.

Mr. Whiston did not care to give more than short, general hints of this famous challenge, and the issue of it; but he endeavours to wind and turn himself every way to evade its force. Waterland.

7. To introduce by insinuation.

You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd offices, and to wind
Yourself into a power tyrannical. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Edmund, seek him out, wind me into him, frame the business after your own wisdom. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Little arts and dexterities they have to wind in such things into discourse. Gov. of the Tongue.

8. To change.

Were our legislature vested in the prince, he might wind and turn our constitution at his pleasure, and shape our government to his fancy. Addison.

9. To entwist; to enfold; to encircle.

Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms. Shakspeare.
You know me well, and herein spend but time
To wind about my love with circumstance. Shakspeare.

Sometime am I
All wound with adders who with cloven tongues
Do hiss me into madness. Shakspeare.

10. To WIND out. To extricate.

When he found himself dangerously embarked, he bethought himself of all possible ways to disentangle himself, and to wind himself out of the labyrinth he was in. Clarendon.

11. To WIND up. To bring to a small compass, as a bottom of thread.

Without solemnly winding up one argument, and intimating that he began another, he lets his thoughts, which were fully possessed of the matter, run in one continued strain. Locke.

12. To WIND up. [Used of a watch.] To convolve the spring.

I frown the while, and perchance wind up my watch, or play with some rich jewel. Shakspeare.

13. To WIND up. To put into a state of renovated or continued motion.

Fate seemed to wind him up for fourscore years,
Yet freshly ran he on, ten winters more:
Till like a clock worn out with calling time,
The wheels of weary life at last stood still. Dryden.

Will not the Author of the universe, having made an automaton, which can wind up itself, see whether it hath stood still, or gone true. Grew.

Is there a tongue, like Delia's o'er her cup,
That runs for ages without winding up? Young.

14. To WIND up. To raise by degrees.

These he did so wind up to his purpose that they withdrew from the court. Hayward.

When they could not cooly convince him, they railed, and called him an heretick: thus they wound up his temper to a pitch, and treacherously made use of that infirmity. Atterbury.

15. To WIND up. To straiten a string by turning that on which it is rolled; to put in tune.

Hylas! why sit we mute,
Now that each bird saluteth the spring?
Wind up the slacken'd strings of thy lute,
Never canst thou want matter to sing. Waller.
Your lute may wind its strings but little higher
To tune their notes to that immortal quire. Prior.

16. To WIND up. To put in order for regular action: from a watch.

O you kind gods!
Cure this great breach of his abused nature;
Th' untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father. Shakspeare.
The weyrd sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again to make up nine:
Peace, the charm's wound up. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To WIND. v. n.

1. To turn; to change.

So swift your judgments turn and wind,
You cast our fleetest wits a mile behind. Dryden.

2. To turn; to be convolved.

Some plants can support themselves, and some others creep along the ground, or wind about other trees, and cannot support themselves. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Stairs of a solid newel spread only upon one small newel, as the several folds of fans spread about their center; but these, because they sometimes wind, and sometimes fly off from that winding, take more room up in the stair-case. Moxon.

3. To move round.

If aught obstruct thy course, yet stand not still,
But wind about, till thou hast topp'd the hill. Denham.

4. To proceed in flexures.

It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
As rob me of so rich a bottom here. Shakspeare.
Ever more did winde
About his bosome a most crafty minde. Chapman.

He winds with ease
Through the pure marble air his oblique way,
Amongst innumerable stars. Milton, P. L.
It was a rock winding with one ascent. Milton, P. L.
The silver Thames, her own domestick flood,
Shall bear her vessels, like a sweeping train;
And often wind, as of his mistress proud,
With longing eyes to meet her face again. Dryden.
You that can search those many corner'd minds,
Where woman's crooked fancy turns and winds. Dryden.
Still fix thy eyes intent upon the throng,
And, as the passes open, wind along. Gay.

Thy master thus with pleacht arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face subdu'd
To penetrative shame? Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

3. To break into openings.

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you
From seasons such as these? Shakspeare, K. Lear.

WI'NDOWY.* adj. [from window.] Like a window; having little crossings.

Or treacherously poor fish beset
With strangling snare, or windowy net. Donne, Poems, p. 38.

WI'NDPIPE. n. s. [wind and pipe.] The passage for the breath; the aspere arteria.

Let gallows gape for dogs, let man go free,
And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

The wezzon, rough artery, or windpipe, is a part inservient to voice and respiration: thereby the air descendeth unto the lungs, and is communicated unto the heart. Brown.

The quacks of government, who sat
At the unregarded helm of state,
Consider'd timely how t' withdraw,
And save their windpipes from the law. Hudibras.

Because continual respiration is necessary for the support of our lives, the windpipe is made with annulary cartilages. Ray.

The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches, called bronchia: these end in small air-bladders, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

WI'NDSHOCK.* n. s. [wind and shock.] A crack or other damage in the body of a tree, supposed to be occasioned by high winds. Ash.

Of endless winter and perpetual rain. Dryden.

Liest thou asleep beneath those hills of snow?
Stretch out thy lazy limbs; awake, awake,
And winter from thy furry mantle shake. Dryden.

Suppose our poet was your foe before,
Yet now, the bus'ness of the field is o'er,
'Tis time to let your civil wars alone,
When troops are into winter-quarters gone. Dryden.

He that makes no reflections on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in winter-nights for the entertainment of others. Locke.

Stern Winter smiles on that auspicious clime,
The fields are florid with unfading prime. Pope.

To define Winter, I consider first wherein it agrees with Summer, Spring, Autumn, and I find they are all seasons of the year; therefore a season of the year is a genus: then I observe wherein it differs from these, and that is in the shortness of the days; therefore this may be called its special nature, or difference: then, by joining these together, I make a definition. Winter is that season of the year wherein the days are shortest. Watts, Logick.

To Wi'nter. v. n. [from the noun.] To pass the winter.

The fowls shall summer upon them, and all the beasts of the earth shall winter upon them. Is. xviii. 6.

Because the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part advised to depart. Acts, xxvii. 12.

To Wi'nter. v. a. To feed or manage in the winter.

The cattle generally sold for slaughter within, or exportation abroad, had never been handled or wintered at handmeat. Temple.

Young lean cattle may by their growth pay for their wintering, and so be ready to fat next summer. Mortimer.

Winter is often used in composition.

The king sat in the winter-house, and there was a fire burning before him. Jer. xxxvi. 22.

If in November and December they fallow, 'tis called a winter-fallowing. Mortimer.

Shred it very small with thyme, sweet margarome, and a little winter-savoury. Walton, Angler.

Wi'nterbeaten. adj. [winter and beat.] Harassed by severe weather.

He compareth his careful case to the sad season of the year, to the frosty ground, to the frozen trees, and to his own winter-beaten flocke. Spenser.

Wi'ntercherry. n. s. [alkekenge.] A plant. The fruit is about the bigness of a cherry, and inclosed in the cup of the flower, which swells over it in form of a bladder. Miller.

Wi'ntercitron. n. s. A sort of pear.

Wi'ntergreen. n. s. [pyrola, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

Wi'nterly. adj. [winter and like.] Such as is suitable to winter; of a wintry kind.

If't be Summer news,
Smile to't before; if winterly, thou need'st
But keep that count'nance still. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Wi'ntry. adj. [from winter.] Brumal; hyemal; suitable to winter.

He saw the Trojan fleet dispers'd, distress'd
By stormy winds, and wintry heav'n oppress'd. Dryden.

Wi'ny. adj. [from wine.] Having the taste or qualities of wine.

Set cucumbers among muskmelons, and see whether the melons will not be more winy, and better tasted. Bacon.

To WIPE. v. a. [ƿipan, Saxon.]

1. To cleanse by rubbing with something soft.

Such a handkerchief,
I'm sure it was your wife's, did I to-day
See Cassio wipe his beard with. Shakspeare, Othello.

She a gentle tear let fall
From either eye, and wip'd them with her hair. Milton, P. L.

Then with her vest the wound she wipes and dries. Denham.

2. To take away by tersion.

Calumniate stoutly; for though we wipe away with never so much care the dirt thrown at us, there will be left some sulliage behind. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

3. To strike off gently.

Let me wipe off this honourable dew,
That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks. Shakspeare.

Some natural tears they dropp'd, but wip'd them soon. Milton, P. L.

A young man, having suffered many tortures, escaped with life, and told his fellow Christians, that the pain of them had been rendered tolerable by the presence of an angel, who stood by him and wiped off the tears and sweat. Addison.

4. To clear away.

Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples; reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

5. [Emungo.] To cheat; to defraud.

The next bordering lords commonly incroach one upon another, as one is stronger, or lie still in wait to wipe them out of their lands. Spenser on Ireland.

6. To Wipe out. To efface.

This blot, that they object against your house,
Shall be wip'd out in the next parliament. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

As thou lov'st me, Camillo, wipe not out the rest of thy services by leaving me now. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Take one in whom decrepid old age has blotted out the memory of his past knowledge, and clearly wiped out the ideas his mind was formerly stored with, and stopped up all the passages for new ones to enter; or if there be some of the inlets yet left open, the impressions made are scarce perceived. Locke.

Wipe.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An act of cleansing.

2. A blow; a stroke; a jeer; a gibe; a sarcasm.

The dignities and liberties of this kingdom shall receive no wipe of abatement during my reign. Proceed. against Garnet, (1606,) Rr. i. b.

To statesmen would you give a wipe,
You print it in Italick type:
When letters are in vulgar shapes,
'Tis ten to one the wit escapes;
But when in capitals exprest,
The dullest reader smokes the jest. Swift.

3. [Vanellus.] A bird. Ainsworth.

Wi'per. n. s. [from wipe.] An instrument or person by which any thing is wiped.

The maids and their makes,
At dancing and wakes,
Had their napkins and posies,
And the wipers for their noses. B. Jonson.

WIRE.† n. s. [virer, French, to draw round. Skinner. Icel. wijr; Sueth. wir, fila ex orichalco; ab antiquiss. wirra, implicare. Serenius.] Metal drawn into slender threads.

Tane was the damsel; and without remorse
The king condemn'd her, guiltless, to the fire:
Her vail and mantle pluckt they off by force,
And bound her tender arms in twisted wire. Fairfax.

Thou shalt be whipt with wire, and stew'd in brine,
Smarting in ling'ring pickle. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

The soldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of horror all environ,
That's strong with wire instead of veins,
In whose embraces you're in chains. Beaum. and Fletcher.

And the cherubick host, in thousand quires,
Touch their immortal harps of golden wires. Milton, Ode.

Some roll a mighty stone, some laid along,
And, bound with burning wires, on spokes of wheels are hung. Dryden, Æn.

To Wi'redraw. v. a. [wire and draw.]

1. To spin into wire.

2. To draw out into length.

A fluid moving through a flexible canal, when small, by its friction will naturally lengthen, and wiredraw the sides of the canal, according to the direction of its axis. Arbuthnot.

3. To draw by art or violence.

I have been wrongfully accused, and my sense wiredrawn into blasphemy. Dryden.

Wi'redrawer. n. s. [wire and draw.] One who spins wire.

Those who have need of unmixed silver, as gilders and wiredrawers, must, besides an equal weight of silver mixed with other metals, give an overplus to reward the refiner's skill. Locke.

Wi'ry.* adj. [from wire.] See Wiery. Mr. Nares prefers wiry, Elem. of Orthoep. p. 320. Dr. Johnson has chosen wiery, after the example, I suppose, of fiery. Yet we write miry and spiry.

To Wis.† v. a. pret. and part. pass. wist. [ƿiȷȷan, Saxon; wissen, German; wysen, Dutch.] To think; to imagine. Obsolete.

Thus proud and fierce, unto the hearts he stept
Of them poor souls; and cutting reason's reins,
Made them his own before they had it wist. Sidney.

When Mammon saw his purpose mist,
Him to entrap unwares, another way he wist. Spenser.

This book, advisedly read and diligently followed but one year at home, would do a young gentleman more good, I wiss, than three years travel abroad. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

There be fools alive, I wis,
Silver'd o'er; and so was this. Shakspeare.

Marry with a king,
A batchelor, a handsome stripling too,
I wis your grandam had a worser match. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

When for more worlds the Macedonian cry'd,
He wist not Thetys in her lap did hide
Another yet, a world reserv'd for you,
To make more great than that he did subdue. Waller.

WI'SDOM. n. s. [piꞅbom, Saxon; wiisdom, Danish.]

1. Sapience; the power of judging rightly; the knowledge of divine and human things.

That which moveth God to work is goodness, and that which ordereth his work is wisdom, and that which perfecteth his work is power. Hooker.

As from senses reason's work doth spring,
So many reasons understanding gain,
And many understandings knowledge bring,
And by much knowledge wisdom we obtain. Davies.

Wisdom is that which makes men judge what are the best ends, and what the best means to attain them, and gives a man advantage of counsel and direction. Temple.

As science is properly that knowledge which relateth to the essences of things, so wisdom to their operations. Grew, Cosmol.

O sacred solitude! divine retreat!
Choice of the prudent! envy of the great!
By thy pure stream, or in the waving shade,
We court fair wisdom, that celestial Maid. Young.

2. Prudence; skill in affairs; judicious conduct.

'Tis much he dares,
And to that dauntless temper of his mind,
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour
To act in safety. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Wisdom and fortune combating together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

WI'SARD.* See WIZARD.

WISE.† adj. [piꞅ, Saxon; wiis, Dutch and Danish: from piꞅꞅan, wissen, wysen, to know. See To WIS.]

1. Sapient; judging rightly; having much knowledge.

Heaven is for thee too high; be lowly wise. Milton, P. L.

All the writings of the ancient Goths were composed in verse, which were called runes, or viises, and from thence the term of wise came. Temple.

Since the floods demand
For their descent a prone and sinking land:
Does not this due declivity declare,
A wise director's providential care? Blackmore.

The wisest and best men in all ages, have lived up to the religion of their country, when they saw nothing in it opposite to morality. Addison.

2. Judicious; prudent; practically knowing.

There were ten virgins, five of them were wise, and five were foolish. St. Matthew, xxv.

I would have you wise unto that which is good, and simple concerning evil. Rom. xvi. 19.

The young and gay declining, Alma flies
At nobler game, the mighty and the wise:
By nature more an eagle than a dove,
She impiously prefers the world to love. Young.

3. Skilful; dexterous.

Speak unto all that are wise-hearted, whom I have filled with the spirit of wisdom, that they may make Aaron's garments. Exod. xxviii. 3.

Do we count him a wise man, who is wise in any thing but his own proper profession and employment, and wise for every body but himself? Tillotson.

They are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge. Jer. iv. 22.

4. Skilled in hidden arts: a sense somewhat ironical.

There was an old fat woman even now with me.——
—Pray, was't not the wise woman of Brainford? Shakspeare.

5. Grave; becoming a wise man.

One eminent in wise deport spake much. Milton, P. L.

It must be a wise Being that is the cause of those wise effects. Wilkins.

WISE. n. s. [piꞅe, Saxon; wyse, Dutch; weise, Germ. guise, Fr. guisa, Italian.] Manner; way of being or acting. This word, in the modern dialect, is often corrupted into ways.

This song she sings in most commanding wise;
Come, shepherd's boy, let now thy heart be bow'd
To make itself to my least look a slave. Sidney.

Ere we farther pass, I will devise
A passport for us both, in fittest wise. Spenser.

On this wise ye shall bless Israel. Num. vi. 23.

The lovers standing in this doleful wise,
A warrior bold approached. Fairfax.

With foam upon thy lips, and sparkling eyes,
Thou say'st and do'st in such outrageous wise,
That mad Orestes, if he saw the show,
Wou'd swear thou wert the madder of the two. Dryden.

'Tis in no wise strange that such a one should believe, that things were blindly shuffled. Woodward.

WI'SEACRE.† n. s. [It was anciently written wisesegger, as the Dutch wiseggher, a soothsayer.] Dr. Johnson.—Germ. weissager, à Sueth. wiss, certus, et saega, dicere. Serenius.]

1. A wise, or sententious man. Obsolete.

Pythagoras lerned muche,—becomming a myghtye wyseacre. Leland, Cert. Quest. Lives, &c. i. 99.

2. A fool; a dunce.

Why, says a wiseacre that sat by him, were I as the king of France, I would scorn to take part with footmen. Addison.

WI'SELING.* adj. [from wise.] One pretending to be wise: a word of contempt.

This may well put to the blush these wiselings, that shew themselves fools in so speaking. Donne, Hist. of the Sept. p. 214.

WI'SELY. adv. [from wise.] Judiciously; prudently.

If thou covet death, as utmost end
Of misery; so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd; doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire. Milton, P. L.

He sits like discontented Damocles,
When by the sportive tyrant wisely shown,
The dangerous pleasure of a flatter'd throne. Dryden.

Admitting their principles to be true, they act wisely: they keep their end, evil as it is, steadily in view. Rogers.

The doctors, tender of their fame,
Wisely on me lay all the blame:
We must confess his case was nice,
But he wou'd never take advice. Swift.

WI'SENESS. n. s. [from wise.] Wisdom; sapience. Obsolete.

No less deserveth his wittiness in devising, his pithiness in uttering, his pastoral rudeness, and his moral wiseness. Spenser.

To WISH. v. n. [piꞅcian, Sax.]

1. To have strong desire; to long.

The sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and wished in himself to die. Jonah, iv. 8.

If all the year were playing holidays,
To sport would be as tedious as to work;
But when they seldom come, they wish'd for come. Shakspeare.

They have more than heart could wish. Ps. lxxiii. 7.

Eve,
With lowliness majestick from her seat,
And grace, that won who saw to wish her stay,
Rose, and went forth. Milton, P. L.

There are ships prepar'd by my command,
That shall convey you to the wish'd-for port. Addison, Cato.

That Noah or Janus understood navigation, may be very well supported by his image found upon the first Roman coins. One side was stampt with a Janus bifrons, and the other with a rostrum, or prow of a ship. This is as good an argument as an antiquary could wish for. Arbuthnot on Coins.

And much he wish'd, but durst not ask to part. Parnel.

2. To be disposed, or inclined.

Those potentates, who do not wish well to his affairs, have shewn respect to his personal character. Addison.

3. It has a slight signification of hope, or fear.

I wish it may not prove some ominous foretoken of misfortune, to have met with such a miser as I am. Sidney.

To WISH. v. a.

1. To desire; to long for.

He was fain to pull him out by the heels, and shew him the beast as dead as he could wish it. Sidney.

2. To recommend by wishing.

Had I as many sons as I have hairs,
I would not wish them to a fairer death.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. To imprecate.

If heavens have any grievous plague in store,
Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee;
O let them keep it till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

4. To ask.

Digby should find the best way to make Antrim communicate the affair to him, and to wish his assistance. Clarendon.

WISH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Longing desire.

To his wish,
Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies. Milton, P. L.

A wish is properly the desire of a man sitting or lying still; but an act of the will, is a man of business vigorously going about his work. South, Serm.

2. Thing desired.

What next I bring shall please thee; be assur'd,
Thy likeness, thy fit help, thy other self,
Thy wish, exactly to thy heart's desire. Milton, P. L.

3. Desire expressed.

Shame come to Romeo! —
— Blister'd be thy tongue
For such a wish. Shakspear. Rom. and Jul.

I admire your whig-principles of resistance in the spirit of the Barcelonians: I join in your wish for them. Pope.

WI'SHEDLY. adv. [from wished.] According to desire. Not used.

What could have happened unto him more wishedly, than with his great honour to keep the town still. Knolles.

WI'SHER. n. s. [from wish.]

1. One who longs.

2. One who expresses wishes.

Wishers and woulders are never good householders.
Proverb.

On all she's leaving! Blair, Grave.

I was weary of this day, and began to think wishfully of being again in motion. Boswell, Tour to the Hebr. p. 98.

WI'SHLY.* adv. [from wish.] With longing; wishfully. Not in use.

Devereux, that undaunted knight,
Who stood astern his ship, and wishly ey'd
How deep the skirmish drew on either side.
Mir. for Mag. p. 863.

WI'SKET. n. s. A basket. Ainsworth.

WISP. n. s. [wisp, Swedish, and old Dutch.] A small bundle, as of hay or straw.

A wisp of straw for a ballad. Shakspeare.

A gentleman would fast five days, without meat, bread, or drink; but the same used to have continually a great wisp of herbs that he smelled on: and amongst those, some esculent herb of strong scent, as onions. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Jews, who their whole wealth can lay
In a small basket, on a wisp of hay. Dryden.

WIST. pret. and part. of wis.

WI'STFUL. adj.

1. Attentive; earnest; full of thought.

Why, Grubbinel, dost thou so wistful seem?
There's sorrow in thy look. Gay, Pastorals.

2. It is used by Swift, as it seems, for wishful; though it may mean earnest, eager.

Lifting up one of my sashes, I cast many a wistful melancholy look towards the sea. Swift.

WI'STFULLY. adv. [from wistful.] Attentively; earnestly.

With that he fell again to pry
Through perspective more wistfully. Hudibras.

WI'STLY. adv. [from wis.] Attentively; earnestly.

Speaking it, he wistly look'd on me;
As who shall say, — I would thou wert the man. Shakspeare.

To WIT.† v. n. [ƿitan, Saxon.] To know; to be known. This word is now only used in the phrase to wit; that is to say. Formerly to weet.

There is an officer, to wit, the sheriff of the shire, whose office it is, to walk up and down his bailiwick. Spenser.

Yet are these feet, whose strengthless stay is numb,
Unable to support this lump of clay,
Swift-winged with desire to get a grave;
As witting, I no other comfort have. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

WIT.† n. s. [ȝepit, Sax. wit, Icel. from wita; witan, M. Goth. ƿitan, Sax. to know. Serenius.]

1. The powers of the mind; the mental faculties; the intellects. This is the original signification.

Who would set his wit to so foolish a bird? Shakspeare.

The king your father was reputed for
A prince most prudent, of an excellent
And unmatch'd wit and judgement. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Will puts in practice what the wit deviseth:
Will ever acts, and wit contemplates still:
And as from wit the power of wisdom riseth,
All other virtues daughters are of will.
Will is the prince, and wit the counsellor,
Which doth for common good in council sit;
And when wit is resolv'd, will lends her power
To execute what is advis'd by wit. Davies on Ireland.

For wit and pow'r, their last endeavours bend
T' outshine each other. Dryden.

2. Imagination; quickness of fancy.

They never meet, but there's a skirmish of wit between them.
— Alas, in our last conflict four of his five wits went halting off, and now is the whole man governed by one. Shakspeare.

Lewd, shallow, hair-brain'd huffs, make atheism and contempt of religion, the only badge and character of wit. South.

And though a tun in thy large bulk be writ,
Yet thou art but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.

Wit lying most in the assemblage of ideas, and putting those together with quickness and variety, wherein can be found any resemblance, or congruity, thereby to make up pleasant pictures in the fancy. Judgement, on the contrary, lies in separating carefully one from another, ideas, wherein can be found the least difference, thereby to avoid being misled by similitude. Locke.

Cou'd any but a knowing prudent cause
Begin such motions, and assign such laws?
If the great mind had form'd a different frame,
Might not your wanton wit the system blame? Blackmore.

3. Sentiments produced by quickness of fancy; or by genius: the effect of wit.

All sorts of men take a pleasure to gird at me. The brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends more to laughter, than what I invent, and is invented on me. I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakspeare.

His works become the frippery of wit. B. Jonson.

The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdu'd the world. Sprat.

The definition of wit is only this; that it is a propriety of thoughts and words; or, in other terms, thoughts and words elegantly adapted to the subject. Dryden.

Let a lord once but own the happy lines;
How the wit brightens, and the style refines! Pope.

4. A man of fancy.

Intemperate wits will spare neither friend nor foe; and make themselves the common enemies of mankind. L'Estrange.

A poet, being too witty himself, could draw nothing but wits in a comedy: even his fools were infected with the disease of their author. Dryden.

To tell them wou'd a hundred tongues require;
Or one vain wit's, that might a hundred tire. Pope.

5. A man of genius.

Hence 'tis a wit, the greatest word of fame,
Grows such a common name;
And wits by our creation they become;
Just so as titular bishops made at Rome:
'Tis not a rule, tis not a jest,
Admir'd with laughter at a feast,
Nor florid talk which can that title gain,
The proofs of wit for ever must remain. Cowley.

Searching wits, of more mechanick parts;
Who grac'd their age with new-invented arts:
Those who to worth their bounty did extend,
And those who knew that bounty to commend. Dryden.

How vain that second life in others breath?
Th' estate which wits inherit after death;
Ease, health, and life, for this they must resign,
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine!
The great man's curse, without the gain endure;
Be envy'd, wretched; and be flatter'd, poor. Pope.

Nought but a genius can a genius fit;
A wit herself, Amelia weds a wit. Young.

6. Sense; judgment.

Strong was their plot,
Their practice close, their faith suspected not;
Their states far off, and they of wary wit. Daniel.

Come, leave the loathed stage,
And this more loathsome age;
Where pride and impudence in faction knit,
Usurp the chair of wit. B. Jonson.

Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine,
He wants not wit the danger to decline. Dryden.

7. Faculty of the mind.

If our wits run the wild-goose chace, I have done; for thou hast more of the wild-goose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

8. [In the plural.] Soundness of understanding; intellect not crazed; sound mind.

I had a son
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he sought my life:
The grief hath craz'd my wits. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain? Shakspeare.

Sound sleep cometh of moderate eating; he riseth early, and his wits are with him: but the pain of watching, and choler, and pangs of the belly, are with an unsatiable man. Ecclus. xxxi. 20.

No man in his wits can make any doubt, whether there be such things as motion, and sensation and continuity of bodies. Wilkins.

Wickedness is voluntary frenzy, and every sinner does more extravagant things than any man that is crazed, and out of his wits, only that he knows better what he does. Tillotson.

No man in his wits can seriously think that his own soul hath existed from all eternity. Bentley.

9. Contrivance; stratagem; power of expedients; invention; ingenuity.

How can it chuse but bring the simple to their wits end? how can it chuse but vex and amaze them? Hooker.

I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brainford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, counterfeiting the action of an old woman, delivered me. Shakspeare.

Sleights from his wit and subtlety proceed. Milton.

The neighbourhood were at their wits end, to consider what would be the issue. L'Estrange.

WITCH.† n. s. [piꝛce, Saxon; from the West-Goth. wita, fascinare, Serenius; from the Sax. piccian, incantare, Mr. H. Tooke. Old English wiche.]

1. A woman given to unlawful arts.

Wise judges have prescribed, that men may not rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor the evidence against them. For the witches themselves are imaginative; and people are credulous, and ready to impute accidents to witchcraft. Bacon.

View the ruder witch, the conjurer by root, and has she not store of ignorance, and zeal of mischief. Holyday.

The night-hag comes to dance
With Lapland witches, while the labouring moon
Eclipses at their charms. Milton, P. L.

When I consider whether there are such persons as witches, my mind is divided: I believe in general that there is such a thing as witchcraft, but can give no credit to any particular instance of it. Addison, Spect.

2. [From pic, Saxon.] A winding sinuous bank. Witch is here the reading of all the old copies of Spenser. Hughes altered it to ditch.

Leave me those hills where harbrough nis to see,
Nor holy bush, nor briar, nor winding witch. Spenser.

To WITCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To bewitch; to enchant.

Me ill befits, that in der-doing arms,
And honour's suit my vowed days do spend,
Unto thy bounteous baits, and pleasing charms,
With which weak men thou witchest to attend. Spenser.

'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When church-yards yawn. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

I'll witch sweet ladies with my words and looks. Shakspeare.

WI'TCHCRAFT. n. s. [witch and craft.]

1. The practices of witches.

People are credulous, and ready to impute accidents and natural operations to witchcraft. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Power more than natural.

Urania name, whose force he knew so well,
He quickly knew what witchcraft gave the blow. Sidney.

Have not some of learning and gravity thought themselves wise, in thinking witch-craft rather a mistake, than a crime? Holyday.

If you cannot
Bar his access to the king, never attempt
Any thing on him, for he hath a witchcraft
Over the king in's tongue. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

What subtile witchcraft man constrains,
To change his pleasure into pains? Denham.

WI'TCHELM.* n. s. [witch and elm.] A kind of elm. Scott.

WI'TCRAFT. n. s. [wit and craft.] Contrivance; invention. Obsolete.

He was no body that could not hammer out of his name an invention by this witcraft, and picture it accordingly. Camden, Rem.

WI'TCRACKER. n. s. [wit and cracker.] A joker; one who breaks a jest.

A college of witcrackers cannot flout me out of my humour; dost thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? Shakspeare.

WI'TWORM. n. s. [wit and worm.] One that feeds on wit; a canker of wit.

Thus to come forth so suddenly a witworm. B. Jonson.

To WITE. v. a. [ƿitan, Saxon.] To blame; to reproach.

The palmer gan most bitterly
Her to rebuke, for being loose and light;
Which not abiding, but more scornfully
Scoffing at him, that did her justly wite,
She turn'd her boat about. Spenser.

WITE.† n. s. [from the verb.] Blame; reproach.

His own thought he knew most clear from wite. Spenser, F. Q.

WI'TELESS.* adj. [wite and less.] Blameless.

Ne can Willie wite the witeless herdgroom. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

WITH.† preposit. [ƿið, Saxon. Serenius refers this preposition to the M. Goth. withan, to join; of which Mr. H. Tooke also pronounces it the imperative mood.]

1. By. Noting the cause.

Truth, tir'd with iteration,
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon. Shakspeare.

With thy pow'rful blast,
Heat apace, and cool as fast. Carew.

They adhered to John their deprived bishop: and could not be charmed with the saintship of any second bishop, during his life. Leslie.

With ev'ry stab her bleeding heart was torn,
With wounds much harder to be seen than born. Rowe.

2. Noting the means.

Rude and unpolished are all operations of the soul in their beginnings, before they are cultivated with art and study. Dryden.

3. Noting the instrument.

Boreas through the lazy vapour flies,
And sweeps, with healthy wings, the rank polluted skies. Rowe.

By perflations with large bellows, miners give motion to the air. Woodward.

4. On the side of; for; noting confederacy, or favour.

Fear not, for I am with thee. Genesis.

5. In opposition to; in competition or contest.

I do contest as hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever against thy valour. Shakspeare, Coriol.

He shall lie with any friar in Spain. Dryden, Span. Friar.

6. Noting comparison.

Can blazing carbuncles with her compare? Sandys.

7. In society; noting connection.

God gave man a soul that should live for ever, although the body be destroyed; and those who were good should be with him. Stillingfleet.

In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow,
Thou'rt such a touchy, testy, pleasing fellow:
Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee,
There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Tatler.

8. In company of.

At the instant that your messenger came, in loving visitation was with me, a young doctor from Rome. Shakspeare.

9. In appendage; noting consequence, or concomitance.

Men might know the persons who had a right to regal power, and with it to their obedience. Locke.

10. In mutual dealing.

I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following; but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. Shakspeare.

11. Noting confidence: as, I trust you with all my secrets; or, I trust all my secrets with you.

12. In partnership.

To part his throne, and share his heaven with thee. Pope.

13. Noting connection.

Pity your own, or pity our estate,
Nor twist our fortunes with your sinking fate. Dryden.

14. Immediately after.

With that she told me, that though she spake of her father Cremes, she would hide no truth from me. Sidney.

With that, he crawled out of his nest,
Forth creeping on his caitiff hands and thighs. Spenser, F. Q.

In falling, both an equal fortune try'd;
Wou'd fortune for my fall so well provide!
With this he pointed to his face, and show'd
His hands, and all his habit smear'd with blood. Dryden.

With that, the God his darling phantom calls,
And from his falt'ring lips this message falls. Garth.

15. Amongst.

Jasper Duke of Bedford, whom the king used to employ with the first in his wars, was then sick. Bacon.

17. In consent. Noting parity of state.

See! where on earth the flow'ry glories lie:
With her they flourish'd, and with her they die. Pope.

18. This preposition might perhaps be exemplified in many more relations, for its use is very frequent, and therefore very lax and various. With and by, it is not always easy to distinguish, nor perhaps is any distinction always observed. With seems rather to denote an instrument, and by a cause: thus, he killed his enemy with a sword, but he died by an arrow. The arrow is considered rather as a cause, as there is no mention of an agent. If the agent be more remote, by is used; as, the vermin which he could not kill with his gun, he killed by poison: if these two prepositions be transposed, the sentence, though equally intelligible, will be less agreeable to the common modes of speech.

19. With in composition signifies opposition, or privation, except withal.

A present natural good may be parted with, upon a profitable expectation of a future moral good. Wilkins.

WITHA'L. adv. [with and all.]

1. Along with the rest; likewise; at the same time.

Yet it must be withal considered, that the greatest part of the world are they which be farthest from perfection. Hooker.

How well supply'd with noble counsellors?
How modest in exception, and withal
How terrible in constant resolution? Shakspeare, Hen. V.

The one contains my picture, prince;
If you chuse that, then I am yours withal. Shakspeare.

This that prince did not transmit as a power, to make conquest, but as a retinue for his son, and withal to enable him to recover some part of Ulster. Davies on Ireland.

The river being wholly of fresh water, and so large withal, chilleth the air. Heylin.

God, when he gave me strength, to shew withal
How slight the gift was, hung it in my hair. Milton, S. A.

'Tis necessary men should be out of their non-age before they can attain to an actual use of this principle; and withal that they should be ready to exert and exercise their faculties. Wilkins.

I cannot, cannot bear; 'tis past; 'tis done:
Perish this impious, this detested son!
Perish his sire, and perish I withal,
And let the house's heir, and the hop'd kingdom fall. Dryden.

Christ had not only an infinite power to work miracles, but an equal wisdom to know the just force and measure of every argument, to persuade, and withal to look through and through all the dark corners of the soul of man, and to discern what prevails upon them, and what does not. South.

2. It is sometimes used by writers where we now use with, but I think improperly.

Time brings means to furnish him withal;
Let him but wait th' occasions as they fall. Daniel.

It is to know what God loves and delights in, and is pleased withal, and would have us do in order to our happiness. Tillotson.

We owe to christianity the discovery of the most perfect rule of life, that ever the world was acquainted withal. Tillotson.

To WITHDRA'W. v. a. [with and draw; from piδ, or piδeр, Saxon, against, and draw.]

1. To take back; to bereave.

It is not possible they should observe the one, who from the other withdraw unnecessarily obedience. Hooker.

Impossible it is that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite. Hooker.

2. To call away; to make to retire.

Nausicaa is withdrawn, and a whole nation introduced, for a more general praise of Ulysses. Broome.

To WITHDRA'W. v. n. To retire; to retreat.

She from her husband soft withdrew. Milton, P. L.

At this excess of courage all amaz'd,
The foremost of his foes awhile withdraw:
With such respect in enter'd Rome they gaz'd,
Who on high chairs the godlike fathers saw. Dryden.

Duumvir has pass'd the noon of life; but cannot withdraw from entertainments, which are pardonable only before that stage of our being. Tatler.

WITHDRA'WER.* n. s. [from withdraw.] One who bereaves.

He was not a withdrawer of the corn, but a seller. Outred, Tr. of Cope on Prov. (1580,) fol. 192. b.

WITHDRA'WINGROOM. n. s. [withdraw and room.] Room behind another room for retirement.

For an ordinary gentleman, a hall, a great parlour, with a withdrawingroom, with a kitchen, butteries, and other conveniencies, is sufficient. Mortimer, Husbandry.

1. A willow twig.

An Irish rebel put up a petition, that he might be hanged in a with, and not a halter, because it had been so used with former rebels. Bacon.

There let him lie
Till I, of cut-up osiers, did imply
A with, a fathome long, with which his feete
I made together, in a sure league meete. Chapman.

2. A band, properly a band of twigs. [withan, M. Goth. to join.]

These cords and withes will hold men's consciences, when force attends and twists them. King Charles.

Birch is of use for ox-yoaks, hoops, screws, wythes for faggots. Mortimer, Husbandry.

To WI'THER. v. n. [ʒepiδeroδ, Saxon, dry, faded.]

1. To fade; to grow sapless; to dry up.

That which is of God we defend, to the uttermost of that ability which he hath given: that which is otherwise, let it wither even in the root from whence it hath sprung. Hooker.

When I have pluck'd thy rose,
I cannot give it vital growth again;
It needs must wither. Shakspeare, Othello.

It shall wither in all the leaves of her spring. Ezek. xvii. 9.

The soul may sooner leave off to subsist, than to love: and like the vine, it withers and dies, if it has nothing to embrace. South, Serm.

2. To waste, or pine away.

Are there so many left of your own family, that you should desire wholly to reduce it, by suffering the last branch of it to wither away before its time. Temple.

3. To lose, or want animal moisture.

Vain men, how vanishing a bliss we crave,
Now warm in love, now with'ring in the grave. Dryden.

To WI'THER. v. a.

1. To make to fade.

The sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth. Ja. i. 11.

2. To make to shrink, decay, or wrinkle, for want of animal moisture.

Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale her infinite variety. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm
Is, like a blasted sapling, withered up. Shakspeare.

What are these,
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,
And yet are on't? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change
To wither'd, weak, and grey. Milton, P. L.

In Spain our springs, like old men's children be,
Decay'd and wither'd, from their infancy:
No kindly showers fall on our barren earth,
To hatch the seasons in a timely birth. Dryden.

WI'THERBAND. n. s. A piece of iron, which is laid under a saddle, about four fingers above the horse's withers, to keep the two pieces of wood tight, that form the bow. Farrier's Dict.

WI'THEREDNESS.† n. s. [from withered.] The state of being withered; marcidity.

The dead witheredness of good affections. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

Water them as soon as set, till they have recovered their witheredness. Mortimer, Husbandry.

WI'THERS. n. s. Is the joining of the shoulder-bones at the bottom of the neck and mane, towards the upper part of the shoulder. Farrier's Dict.

Let the gall'd beast wince;
We are unwrung in the withers. Shakspeare.

Rather than let your master take long journies, contrive that the saddle may pinch the beast in his withers. Swift.

WI'THERWRUNG. The hurt expressed by witherwrung sometimes is caused by a bite of a horse, or by a saddle being unfit, especially when the bows are too wide; for when they are so, they bruise the flesh against the spines of the second and third vertebre of the back, which forms that prominence that rises above their shoulders. Farrier's Dict.

To WITHHO'LD. v. a. [with and hold.] Withheld or withholden, pret. and part. Spenser has, for the sake of rhyme, very licentiously written withhault.

1. To restrain; to keep from action; to hold back.

Sith mine he is, or free or bound;
Withhold, O sovereign prince, your hasty hand
From knitting league with him. Spenser.

That hand, which, as no kind of imminent danger could cause at first to withhold itself, so neither have any practices so many, so bloody, following since, been ever able to make weary. Hooker.

The prince
Would fain have come with me to meet your grace;
And by his mother was perforce withheld. Shakspeare.

A great number of suits are for abusive words, or a box on the ear, or other trivial matters, which leave no permanent ill effects, but if our passions may be with-held from estimating them, pass off without making us the worse, or doing us any prejudice. Kettlewell.

Be careful to withhold
Your talons from the wretched and the bold:
Tempt not the brave and needy to despair;
For though your violence should leave them bare
Of gold and silver, swords and darts remain. Dryden.

Volition is an act of the mind, knowingly exerting that dominion it takes itself to have over any part of man, by employing it in, or withholding it from any particular action. Locke.

2. To hinder; to obstruct.

What difficulties there are, which as yet withhold our assent till we be further and better satisfied, I hope no indifferent amongst them will scorn or refuse to hear. Hooker.

3. To take away; to refuse.

Soon as Titan gan his head exault,
And soon again as he his light withhault,
Their wicked engines they against it bent. Spenser.

WITHHO'LDEN. part. pass. of withhold.

The word keep back, sheweth, that it was a thing formerly due unto God; for we cannot say that any thing is kept back, or withholden, that was not due before. Spelman.

WITHHO'LDER.† n. s. [from withhold.] One who withholds.

The words are spoken against them that invade tithes and church rights; and that which is there threatened, happened to this withholder. Stephens, Add. to Spelman on Sacril. p. 138.

WITHI'N. prep. [piðinnan, Saxon.]

1. In the inner part of.

Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn
Itself for being there? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

By this means, not only many helpless persons will be provided for, but a generation of men will be bred up within ourselves, not perverted by any other hopes. Sprat.

Till this be cured by religion, it is as impossible for a man to be happy, that is, pleased and contented within himself, as it is for a sick man to be at ease. Tillotson.

The river is afterwards wholly lost within the waters of the lake, that one discovers nothing like a stream, till within about a quarter of a mile from Geneva. Addison.

2. In the compass of; not beyond: used both of place and time.

Next day we saw, within a kenning before us, thick clouds, which put us in hope of land. Bacon.

A beet-root, and a radish-root, which had all their leaves cut close to the roots, within six weeks had fair leaves. Bacon.

Most birds come to their growth within a fortnight. Bacon.

Within some while the king had taken up such liking of his person, that he resolved to make him a masterpiece. Wotton.

The invention of arts necessary or useful to human life, hath been within the knowledge of men. Burnet.

As to infinite space, a man can no more have a positive idea of the greatest than he has of the least space. For in this latter, which is more within our comprehension, we are capable only of a comparative idea of smallness, which will always be less than any one, whereof we have the positive idea. Locke.

This, with the green hills and naked rocks within the neighbourhood, makes the most agreeable confusion. Addison.

Bounding desires within the line which birth and fortune have marked out, is an indispensable duty. Atterbury.

9. In the inclosure of.

No interwoven reeds a garland made,
To hide his brows within the vulgar shade;
But poplar wreaths around his temples spread. Addison.

Sedentary and within-door arts, and delicate manufactures, that require rather the finger than the arm, have a contrariety to a military disposition. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

WITHI'N. adv.

1. In the inner parts; inwardly; internally.

This is yet the outward, fairest side
Of our design. Within rests more of fear,
More dread of sad event yet undescry'd. Daniel.

Yet sure tho' the skin
Be clos'd without, the wound festers within. Carew.

Death thou hast seen
In his first shape on man; but many shapes
Of death, and many are the ways that lead
To his grim cave: all dismal, yet to sense
More terrible at the entrance, than within. Milton, P. L.

2. In the mind.

Language seems too low a thing to express your excellence, and our souls are speaking so much within, that they despise all foreign conversation. Dryden, State of Innocence.

These, as thy guards from outward harms, are sent;

Nor was long his witness unconfirmed. Milton.

Ye moon and stars, bear witness to the truth!
His only crime, if friendship can offend,
Is too much love to his unhappy friend. Dryden, Æn.

Our senses bear witness to the truth of each other's report, concerning the existence of sensible things. Locke.

2. One who gives testimony.

The king's attorney
Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confessions
Of divers witnesses. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

God is witness betwixt me and thee. Gen. xxxi. 50.

Thy trial choose
With me, best witness of thy virtue try'd. Milton.

A fat benefice became a crime, and witness too against its incumbent. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

Nor need I speak my deeds, for these you see;
The sun and day are witnesses for me. Dryden.

3. With a WITNESS. Effectually; to a great degree, so as to leave some lasting mark or testimony behind. A low phrase.

Here was a blessing handed out with the first pairs of animals at their creation; and it had effect with a witness. Woodward.

Now gall is bitter with a witness;
And love is all delight and sweetness. Prior.

To WI'TNESS. v. a. [from the noun.] To attest; to tell with asseveration.

There ran a rumour
Of many worthy fellows that were out,
Which was to my belief witness'd the rather,
For that I saw the tyrant's pow'r a-foot. Shakspeare.

Though by the father he were hir'd to this,
He ne'er could witness any touch or kiss. Donne.

These be those discourses of God, whose effects those that live witness in themselves; the sensible in their sensible natures, the reasonable in their reasonable souls. Ralegh.

To WI'TNESS. v. n. To bear testimony.

The sea strave with the winds which should be louder, and the shrouds of the ship with a ghastly noise to them that were in it, witnessed that their ruin was the wager of the others contention. Sidney.

Mine eye doth his effigies witness,
Most truly limn'd and living in your face. Shakspeare.

Witness you ever-burning lights above!
You elements that clip us round about!
Witness that here Iago now doth give
The execution of his wit, hands and heart,
To Othello's service. Shakspeare.

Lorenzo
Shall witness I set forth as soon as you. Shakspeare.

I witness to
The times that brought them in. Shakspeare.

Another beareth witness of me, and I know that the witness which he witnesseth of me is true. St. John, v. 32.

The Americans do acknowledge and speak of the deluge in their continent, as Acosta witnesseth, and Laet in the histories of them. Burnet, Theory.

Witness, ye heav'ns! I live not by my fault,
I strove to have deserv'd the death I sought. Dryden, Æn.

Lord Falkland witnesses for me, that in a book there were many subjects that I had thought on for the stage. Dryden.

Witness for me, ye awful gods,
I took not arms till urg'd by self-defence,
The eldest law of nature. Rowe.

WI'TNESS. interj. An exclamation signifying that person or thing may attest it.

For want of words, or lack of breath,
Witness, when I was worried with thy peels. Milton, S. A.

WI'TNESSER.* n. s. [from witness.] One who gives testimony.

He was now so well become a constant witnesser of the passion of Christ, that, by crucifying the desires of his flesh, he gave an example of an heavenly conversation unto all his subjects. Martin, Marr. of Priests, sign. Z. iii.

WITSNA'PPER. n. s. [wit and snap.] One who affects repartee.

Go in, sirrah; bid them prepare for dinner.—
—That is done, sir; they have all stomachs.——
—What a witsnapper are you! Shakspeare.

WI'TTED. adj. [from wit.] Having wit: as, a quick witted boy.

WI'TTICISM. n. s. [from witty.] A mean attempt at wit. This word Dryden innovated. "A mighty witticism, pardon a new word." Dryden, Pref. to he State of Innocence.

We have a libertine fooling even in his last agonies, with a witticism between his teeth, without any regard to sobriety and conscience. L'Estrange.

He is full of conceptions, points of epigram and witticisms, all which are below the dignity of heroick verse. Addison.

WI'TTILY. adv. [from witty.]

1. Ingeniously; cunningly; artfully.

But is there any other beast that lives,
Who his own harm so wittily contrives? Dryden.

2. With flight of imagination.

In conversation wittily pleasant, pleasantly gamesome. Sidney.

The old hermit, that never saw pen and ink, very wittily said to a niece of king Gordobuck, that that is, is. Shakspeare.

Obstinate contemners of all helps and arts, such as presuming on their natural parts, dare deride all diligence, and seem to mock at the terms when they understand not the things; think that way to get off wittily with their ignorance. B. Jonson.

WI'TTINESS.† n. s. [from witty.] The quality of being witty.

No less deserveth his wittiness in devising, his pithiness in uttering, his pastoral rudeness and his moral wiseness. Spenser.

A well conceited wittiness. B. Jonson, Cynth. Rev.

WI'TTINGLY. adv. [from witting, knowing; pitan, Sax. to weet or know.] Knowingly; not ignorantly; with knowledge; by design.

Whatsoever we work as men, the same we do wittingly work and freely; neither are we, according to the manner of natural agents, any way so tied, but that it is in our power to leave things we do undone. Hooker.

Withhold revenge, 'tis not my fault,
Nor wittingly have I infring'd my vow. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

During that dreadful siege, every particular accident for brevity I wittingly pass over. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

He knowingly and wittingly brought evil into the world. More.

No forger of lies willingly and wittingly furnished out the means of his own detection. West on the Resurrection.

WI'TTOL. n. s. [pittol, Sax. from pitan, to know.] A man who knows the falsehood of his wife, and seems contented; a tame cuckold.

O Mars, for what doth serve thy armed ax,
To let that witold beast consume in flames
Thy Venus child? Sidney.

Amaimon sounds well; Lucifer well; yet they are the names of fiends: but cuckold, wittol-cuckold, the devil himself hath not such a name. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

The Theban wittal, when he once descries
Jove is his rival, falls to sacrifice. Cleaveland.

WI'TTOLLY. adj. [from wittol.] Cuckoldly.

The jealous wittolly knave hath masses of money. Shakspeare.

WI'TTY. adj. [from wit.]

1. Judicious; ingenious; inventive.

The deep revolving, witty Buckingham,
No more shall be the neighbour to my counsels. Shakspeare.

Thou art beautiful in thy countenance, and witty in thy words. Judith, xi. 23.

2. Full of imagination.

Histories make men wise, poets witty, the mathematick subtile. Bacon.

Where there is a real stock of wit, yet the wittiest sayings will be found in a great measure the issues of chance. South.

In gentle verse the witty told their flame,
And grac'd their choicest songs with Emma's name. Prior.

3. Sarcastic; full of taunts.

Honeycomb, who was so unmercifully witty upon the women, has given the ladies ample satisfaction by marrying a farmer's daughter. Addison, Spect.

WI'TWAL. n. s. [vireo, Lat.] A bird. Ainsworth.

To WIVE. v. n. [from wife.] To marry; to take a wife.

Were she as rough
As are the swelling Adriatick seas,
I come to wive it wealthily in Padua. Shakspeare.

The ancient saying is no heresy,
Hanging and wiving goes by destiny. Shakspeare.

A shop of all qualities that man loves woman for; besides that hook of wiving, fairness, which strikes the eye. Shakspeare.

Design or chance makes others wive,
But nature did this match contrive. Waller.

To WIVE.† v. a.

1. To match to a wife.

She dying gave it me;
And bid me, when my fate would have me wiv'd,
To give it her. Shakspeare, Othello.

She won so much upon his fancy, though already wived, as [to cause him] to demand her in marriage. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 3.

2. To take for a wife.

If he have the condition of a saint, and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should shrive me than wive me. Shakspeare.

Her whom the first man did wive. Donne, Poems, p. 296.

WI'VEHOOD.* n. s. [wive and hood.] Behaviour becoming a wife.

That girdle gave the virtue of chaste love,
And wivehood true, to all that did it bear. Spenser, F. Q.

No less than counsel on your wivehood, wife. B. Jonson, Dev. an Ass.

WI'VELESS.* adj. [wive and less.] Without a wife; unmarried.

The gift of wyveless life. Confut. of N. Shaxton, (1546,) H. vi. b.

They in their wiveless state run into open abominations. Homily of Matrimony.

WI'VELY. adv. [from wives. It were written more analogically wifely, that is, wife-like.] Belonging to a wife.

Basilius could not abstain from praising Parthenia, as the perfect picture of a womanly virtue, and wively faithfulness. Sidney.

WI'VER, or WI'VERN.* n. s. A kind of heraldick dragon.

The erle of Kent beareth a wiver for his creste and supporters. Thynne, Animadv. on Chaucer.

WIVES. n. s. The plural of wife.

A man of his learning should not so lightly have been carried away with old wives tales, from approvance of his own reason. Spenser, on Ireland.

WI'ZARD.† n. s. [from wise: and therefore should be written wisard.]

1. A wise person; a learned person. Dr. Johnson has observed, that probably the word had at first a laudable meaning; but he took no trouble to discover it, illustrating only the sense of it as an enchanter.

The antique wisards. Spenser, F. Q.

Light — whose nature yet so much is marvelled
Of mortal wights, that it doth much amaze
The greatest wisards which thereon do gaze. Spenser, Hymn Heav. Beauty.

Upon the eastern road
The star-led wizards haste with odours sweet. Milton, Ode Nativ.

2. A conjurer; a magician; an enchanter.

Patience, good lady; wizards know their times. Shakspeare.

He hearkens after prophecies and dreams,
And from the cross-row plucks the letter G;
And says, a wizard told him that by G
His issue disinherited should be. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

That damn'd wizard, hid in sly disguise,
For so by certain signs I knew, had met
Already, ere my best speed could prevent
The aidless innocent lady his wish'd prey. Milton, Comus.

The prophecies of wizards old
Increas'd her terror, and her fall foretold. Waller.

The wily wizard must be caught,
For, unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for nought. Dryden.

WI'ZARD.* adj.

1. Enchanting; charming; overpowering.

At which the wizard passions fly. Collins, Ode to the Manners.

2. Haunted by wizards.

Where Deva spreads her wizard stream. Milton, Lycidas.

To WI'ZEN.* v. n. [ƿiꞅnian, Sax. arescere.] To wither; to become dry: wizened, dried, withered, shrunk. Common in several parts of the north of England.

WO.† } n. s. [ƿa, Saxon; wai, M. Goth. οὐαι, Gr. Woe
WOE. } is the prevailing orthography, and probably will continue to be so. To remove the e is to take away a third part of the word; and being accustomed to see other words of the same kind written with e, as foe, doe, toe, we are the more tenacious of that letter here. Nares, Elem. of Orthoep. p. 321.]

1. Grief; sorrow; misery; calamity.

The king is mad: how stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up and have ingenious feeling
Of my huge sorrows! better I were distract;
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;
And woes by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

So many miseries have craz'd my voice,
That my woe-weary'd tongue is still. Shakspeare.

Her rash hand in evil hour,
Forth reaching to the fruit, Eve pluck'd, she eat:
Earth felt the wound; and nature from her seat
Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe
That all was lost. Milton, P. L.

O'er dreary wastes, they weep each other's wo. Pope.

2. It is often used in denunciations, wo be; or in exclamations of sorrow, wo is; anciently wo worth; ƿa ƿurð, Saxon.

All is but lip wisdom which wants experience: I now, wo is me, do try what love can do. Sidney.

Wo is my heart;
That poor soldier, that so richly fought,
Whose rags sham'd gilded arms; whose naked breast
Stept before shields of proof, cannot be found. Shakspeare.

Many of our princes, woe the while!
Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood. Shakspeare.

Happy are they which have been my friends; and woe to my lord chief-justice. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Howl, ye, wo worth the day. Ezek. xxx. 2.

Wo be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves. Ez.

Wo is me for my hurt, my wound is grievous. Jer. x. 19.

He took and laid it by and wept for wo. Chapman.

If God be such a being as I have described, wo to the world if it were without him: this would be a thousand times greater loss to mankind than the extinguishing of the sun. Tillotson.

Woe to the vanquish'd, woe! Dryden, Albion.

3. A denunciation of calamity; a curse.

Can there be a wo or curse in all the stores of vengeance equal to the malignity of such a practice; of which one single instance could involve all mankind in one confusion? South.

4. Wo seems in phrases of denunciation or imprecation to be a substantive, and in exclamation an adjective, as particularly in the following lines of Shakspeare, which, Dr. Johnson says, seem improper and ungrammatical. This is a mistake: as an adjective, woe is pure Saxon, ƿa, mœstus. And our old authors so use it.

He wexed wondrous woe. Spenser. F. Q.

Woe are we, sir! you may not live to wear
All your true followers out. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

WOAD. n. s. [ƿad, Saxon; glastum, Lat.] A plant cultivated for the dyers, who use it for the foundation of many colours. Miller.

In times of old, when British nymphs were known
To love no foreign fashions like their own;
When dress was monstrous, and fig-leaves the mode,
And quality put on no paint but woad. Garth.

Wo'begone. adj. [wo and begone.] Lost in wo; distracted in wo; overwhelmed with sorrow.

Such a man,
So dull, so dead in look, so woebegone,
Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night,
And would have told him half his Troy was burn'd;
But Priam found the fire, ere he his tongue. Shakspeare.

Who so woebegone
For Ochy, as the isle of ancient Avalon? Drayton.

Tancred he saw his life's joy set at naught,
So woebegone was he with pains of love. Fairfax.

Wode.† adj. Mad. See Wood.

Woe.† See Wo.

Woe worth thee.† See To Worth.

Wo'ful. adj. [wo and full.]

1. Sorrowful; afflicted; mourning.

The woful Gynecia, to whom rest was no ease, had left her lothed lodging, and gotten herself into the solitary places those deserts were full of. Sidney.

How many woful widows left to bow
To sad disgrace! Daniel, Civ. War.

In a tower, and never to be loos'd,
The woful captive kinsmen are inclos'd. Dryden.

2. Calamitous; afflictive.

Wilful extravagance ends in woful want. Proverb.
O woeful day! O day of woe! Philips.

3. Wretched; paltry; sorry.

What woeful stuff this madrigal would be,
In some starv'd hackney-sonneteer, or me?
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens! how the style refines! Pope.

Wo'fully. adv. [from woful.]

1. Sorrowfully; mournfully.

2. Wretchedly: in a sense of contempt.

He who would pass such a judgement upon his condition, as shall be confirmed at that great tribunal, from which there lies no appeal, will find himself wofully deceived, if he judges of his spiritual estate by any of these measures. South.

Wo'fulness.† n. s. [from woful.] Misery; calamity.

I would you to be void of care and wofulness.
Martin, Marr. of Pr. Y. ii. b.

Wold.† n. s. [Wold, whether singly or jointly, in the names of places, signifies a plain open country; from the Saxon polb, a plain and a place without wood. Gibson.]

1. A plain open country; downs.

St. Withold footed thrice the wold. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Who sees not a great difference betwixt the wolds in Lincolnshire and the fens. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 257.

2. Wold and wald with the Saxons signified a ruler or governour; from whence Bertwold is a famous governour; Ethelwold a noble governour: Herwald, and by inversion waldher, a general of an army.
Gibson's Camden.

WOLF.† n. s. [pulp, Saxon; wolf, Dutch; from the M. Goth. wilwan, rapere, diripere. Serenius.]

1. A kind of wild dog that devours sheep: thence any thing ravenous or destructive.

Advance our waving colours on the walls,
Rescu'd is Orleans from the English wolves. Shakspeare.

No, rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To be a com'rade with the wolf and owl,
Necessity's sharp pinch. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou should'st have said, Go, porter, turn the key,
All cruel's else subscrib'd. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. An eating ulcer.

How dangerous it is in sensible things to use metaphorical expressions; and what absurd conceits the vulgar will swallow in the literals, an example we have in our profession, who having called an eating ulcer by the name of wolf, common apprehension conceives a reality therein. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Wo'lfdog. n. s. [wolf and dog.]

1. A dog of a very large breed kept to guard sheep.

The luckless prey, how treach'rous tumblers gain,
And dauntless wolfdogs shake the lion's mane. Tickell.

2. A dog supposed to be bred between a dog and wolf.

Wo'lfish. adj. [from wolf.] Resembling a wolf in qualities or form.

Thy desires
Are wolfish, bloody, starv'd, and ravenous. Shakspeare.

I have another daughter,
Who, I am sure, is kind and comfortable;
When she shall hear this of thee, with her nails
Shall flea thy wolfish visage. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Nothing more common than those wolfish back-friends in all our pretensions. L'Estrange.

A pretence of kindness is the universal stale to all base projects: all wolfish designs walk under sheeps cloathing.
Gov. of the Tongue.

Wo'lfsbane. n. s. [wolf and bane; aconitum, Lat.] A poisonous plant; aconite. Miller.

Wolfsbane is an early flower. Mortimer, Husb.

Wo'lfsmilk. n. s. [tithymallus, Lat.] An herb.
Ainsworth.

Wo'lvish. adj. [from wolves, of wolf; wolvish is more proper.] Resembling a wolf.

Why in this wolvish gown do I stand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick? Shakspeare, Coriol.

My people are grown half wild, they would not worry one another so in that wolvish belluine manner else. Howell.

There is a base wolvish principle within that is gratified with another's misery. South, Serm.

WO'MAN. n. s. [pipman, pimman, Saxon; whence we yet pronounce women in the plural, wimmen. Skinner and Wallis.]

1. The female of the human race.

That man who hath a tongue is no man,
If with his tongue he cannot win a woman. Shakspeare.

Thou dotard, thou art woman-tir'd, unroosted
By thy dame Partlet here. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shakspeare.

And Abimelech took men-servants and women-servants.
Gen. xx. 14.

O woman, lovely woman, nature form'd thee
To temper man: we had been brutes without thee. Otway.

Ceneus a woman once and once a man;
But ending in the sex she first began. Dryden, Æn.

Women are made as they themselves would chuse,
Too proud to ask, too humble to refuse. Garth.

Women in their nature are much more gay and joyous than men; whether it be that their blood is more refined, their fibres more delicate, and their animal spirits more light; vivacity is the gift of women, gravity that of men. Addison.

2. A female attendant on a person of rank.

I could not personally deliver to her
What you commanded me; but by her woman
I sent your message. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

To Wo'man. v. a. [from the noun.] To make pliant like a woman.

I've felt such quirks of joy and grief,
That the first face of neither on the start
Can woman me unto't. Shakspeare.

Wo'maned. adj. [from woman.] Accompanied or united with a woman.

I do attend here on the general,
And think it no addition, nor my wish,
To have him see me woman'd. Shakspeare, Othello.

Wo'manhater. n. s. [woman and hater.] One that has an aversion to the female sex.

How could it come into your mind,
To pitch on me of all mankind,
Against the sex to write a satire;
And brand me for a womanhater. Swift.

Wo'manhead. } n. s. [from woman.] The character
Wo'manhood. } and collective qualities of a woman. Obsolete.

Ne in her speech, ne in her haviour,
Was lightness seen, or looser vanity,
But gracious womanhood and gravity. Spenser.
There dwells sweet love and constant chastity,
Unspotted faith, and comely womanhood,
Regard of honour, and mild modesty. Spenser.
'Tis present death I beg; and one thing more,
That womanhood denies my tongue to tell:
O keep me from their worse than killing lust. Shakspeare.
When my grave is broke up again,
Some second guest to entertain;
For graves have learn'd that womanhead
To be to more than one a bed. Donne.

Wo'manish. adj. [from woman.] Suitable to a woman; having the qualities of a woman; resembling a woman.

Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish; since I assure you there is nothing I desire more than fully to prove myself a man. Sidney.

Zelmane making a womanish habit to be the armour of her boldness, giving up her life to the lips of Philoclea, humbly besought her to keep her speech a while within the paradise of her mind. Sidney.

A voice not soft, weak, piping, and womanish, but audible, strong, and manlike. Ascham.

She then to him these womanish words gan say,
For love of me, leave off. Spenser.
Our fathers minds are dead,
And we are govern'd with our mothers spirits;
Our yoke and suff'rance shew us womanish. Shakspeare.
I do not think he fears death;
He never was so womanish. Shakspeare.

During his banishment, he was so softened and dejected, as he wrote nothing but a few womanish epistles. Bacon.

In a sad look or womanish complaint. Denham.
I melt to womanish tears, and if I stay,
I find my love my courage will betray. Dryden.
The godlike hero, in his breast
Disdain'd, or was asham'd to show
So weak, so womanish a woe. Dryden.

Wo'manishly.* adv. [from womanish.] In a womanish manner.

His hair curled, and womanishly disheveled.
Comment on Chaucer, (1665,) p. 18.

Hammond, Works, iv. 567.

To Wo'manize. v. a. [from woman.] To emasculate; to effeminate; to soften. Proper, but not used.

This effeminate love of a woman doth womanize a man.
Sidney, Arc. b. 1.

Wo'mankind. n. s. [woman and kind.] The female sex; the race of women.

Musidorus had over bitterly glanced against the reputation of womankind. Sidney.

So easy is to appease the stormy wind
Of malice, in the calm of pleasant womankind. Spenser.
Because thou doat'dst on womankind, admiring
Their shape, their colour, and attractive grace,
None are, thou think'st, but taken with such toys.
Milton, P. R.
Each inconvenience makes their virtue cold;
But womankind in ills is ever bold. Dryden, Juv.
Juba might make the proudest of our sex,
Any of womankind, but Marcia, happy. Addison, Cato.
She advanc'd, that womankind
Would by her model form their mind. Swift.

Wo'manly. adj. [from woman.]

1. Becoming a woman; suiting a woman; feminine not masculine.

I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm
Is often laudable; to do good sometime
Accounted dangerous folly: why then, alas!
Do I put up that womanly defence,
To say I'd done no harm? Shakspeare.
She brings your froward wives
As prisoners, to her womanly persuasion. Shakspeare.
All will spy in thy face
A blushing womanly discovering grace. Donne.

Into my feeble breast, when full of thee? Spenser.

To WOO.† v. a. [apoʒob, courted, Saxon; poʒepe, a suitor or lover. Our old word is wow, or wowe. "with gifts he oft her wowed." Spenser, F. Q.]

1. To court; to sue to for love.

We cannot fight for love, as men may do;
We should be woo'd, and were not made to woo. Shakspeare.

Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in scorn of eyes, reflecting gems;
That woo'd to the slimy bottom of the deep,
And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by. Shakspeare.

Fancies and notions he pursues,
Which ne'er had being but in thought:
Each like the Grecian artist woos
The image he himself has wrought. Prior.

My proud rival woos
Another partner to his throne and bed. Philips.

How is the loadstone nature's subtle pride,
By the rude iron woo'd, and made a bride? Cowley.

Oh, stretch thy reign, fair peace! from shore to shore,
Till conquest cease, and slav'ry be no more;
Till the freed Indians in their native groves
Reap their own fruits, and woo their sable loves. Pope.

2. To court solicitously; to invite with importunity.

Yet can she love a foreign emperor,
Whom of great worth and pow'r she hears to be;
If she be woo'd but by ambassador,
Or but his letters or his pictures see:
So while the virgin soul on earth doth stay,
She woo'd and tempted is ten thousand ways
By these great pow'rs, which on the earth bear sway,
The wisdom of the world, wealth, pleasure, praise. Davies.

Sweet bird that shunn'st the noise of folly,
Most musical, most melancholy!
Thee, chauntress, oft the woods among,
I woo to hear thy even-song. Milton, Il Pens.

I need not urge your promise, ere you find
An entrance here, to leave the world behind? Waller.

By the world, we sometimes understand the things of this world; the variety of pleasures and interests which steal away our affections from God. Sometimes we are to understand the men of the world, with whose solicitations we are so apt to comply. Rogers, Serm.

6. Publick life; the publick.

Why dost thou shew me thus to th' world?
Bear me to prison. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.
Hence banished, is banish'd from the world;
And world-exil'd is death. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

7. Business of life; trouble of life.

Here I'll set up my everlasting rest,
And shake the yoke of man's suspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

8. Great multitude.

You a world of curses undergo,
Being the agents, or base second means. Shakspeare.

Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company;
For you in my respect are all the world. Shakespeare.

I leave to speak of a world of other attempts furnished by kings. Ralegh, Apology.

Garments richly woven
And worlds of prize. Chapman.

In double fiftie sable barks: with him a world of men
Most strong and full of valure went. Chapman.

What a world of contradictions would follow upon the contrary opinion, and what a world of confusions upon the contrary practice. Sanderson.

Just so romances are, for what else
Is in them all, but love and battles?
O' th' first of these we have no great matter
To treat of, but a world o' th' latter. Hudibras.

It brought into this world a world of woe. Milton, P. L.

There were a world of paintings, and among the rest the picture of a lion. L'Estrange.

Marriage draws a world of business on our hands, subjects us to law-suits, and loads us with domestick cares. Dryden.

From thy corporeal prison freed,
Soon hast thou reach'd the goal with mended pace;
A world of woes dispatch'd in little space. Dryden.

Why will you fight against so sweet a passion,
And steel your heart to such a world of charms? Addison.

9. Mankind; an hyperbolical expression for many: all the world is a favourite phrase in French, for many.

This hath bred high terms of separation between such and the rest of the world, whereby the one sort are named the brethren, the godly; the other worldlings, time-servers, pleasers of men more than of God. Hooker.

'Tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Thus the world may see what 'tis to innovate! Drayton.

He was willing to declare to all the world, that, as he had been brought up in that religion established in the church of England, so he could maintain the same by unanswerable reasons. Clarendon.

We turn them over to the study of beauty and dress, and the whole world conspires to make them think of nothing else. Law.

10. Course of life.

Persons of conscience will be afraid to begin the world unjustly. Richardson, Clarissa.

11. Universal empire.

Rome was to sway the world. Milton.

This through the east just vengeance hurl'd,
Love lost poor Antony the world. Prior.

12. The manners of men; the practice of life.

Children should not know any wickedness. Old folks have discretion, and know the world. Shakspeare.

What start at this! when sixty years have spread
Their grey experience o'er thy hoary head?
Is this the all-observing age could gain?
Or hast thou known the world so long in vain? Dryden.

If knowledge of the world makes man perfidious,
May Juba ever live in ignorance. Addison, Cato.

The girl might pass, if we could get her
To know the world a little better;
To know the world! a modern phrase
For visits, ombre, balls and plays. Swift.

13. Every thing that the world contains.

Had I now a thousand worlds, I would give them all for one year more, that I might present to God one year of such devotion and good works, as I never before so much as intended. Law.

14. A large tract of country; a wide compass of things.

'Tis I who love's Columbus am, 'tis I,
That must new worlds in it descry. Cowley.

15. A collection of wonders; a wonder. Obsolete.

The bassa having recommended Barbarussa, it was a world to see, how the court was changed upon him. Knolles.

16. Time. A sense originally Saxon; now only used in World without end.

17. In the world. In possibility.

All the precautions in the world were taken for the marriage of his younger brother. Addison.

18. For all the world. Exactly. A ludicrous sense; now little used.

He had a pair of horns like a bull, his feet cloven, as many eyes upon his body as my grey mare hath dapples, and for all the world so placed. Sidney.

Wo'rldliness. n. s. [from worldly.] Covetousness; addictedness to gain.

Wo'rldling. n. s. [from world.] A mortal set upon profit.

Baseminded wretches! are your thoughts so deeply bemired in the trade of ordinary worldlings, as for respect of gain to let so much time pass. Sidney.

The one sort are named the brethren, the godly; the other worldlings, timeservers, and pleasers of men more than pleasers of God. Hooker.

God of the world and worldlings,
Great Mammon! greatest god below the sky. Spenser.

For his weeping in the needless stream;
Poor deer, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
To that which had too much. Shakspeare, As you like it.

That other on his friends his thoughts bestows:
The covetous worldling, in his anxious mind,
Thinks only on the wealth he left behind. Dryden.

If we consider the expectations of futurity, the worldling gives up the argument. Rogers.

Wo'rldly. adj. [from world.]

1. Secular; relating to this life, in contradistinction to the life to come.

He is divinely bent to meditation;
And in no worldly suits would he be moved,
To draw him from his holy exercise. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command? Shakspeare.

The fortitude of a Christian consists in patience, not in enterprizes which the poets call heroic, and which are commonly the effects of interest, pride, and worldly honour. Dryden.

Compare the happiness of men and beasts no farther than it results from worldly advantages. Atterbury.

As to worldly affairs, which my friends thought so heavy upon me, they are most of them of our own making, and fall away as soon as we know ourselves. Law.

2. Bent upon this world; not attentive to a future state.

They'll practise how to live secure,
Worldly or dissolute, on that their lords
Shall leave them to enjoy. Milton, P. L.

3. Human; common; belonging to the world.

Many years it hath continued, standing by no other worldly mean, but that one only hand which erected it. Hooker.

Times and places are approved witnesses of worldly actions. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.

Wo'rldly. adv. [from world.] With relation to the present life.

It is a token of a worldly wise man, not to contend in vain against the nature of times wherein he liveth. Ralegh.

Subverting worldly strong and worldly wise,
By simply meek. Milton, P. L.

This cannot be done, if my will be worldly, or voluptuously disposed. South, Serm.

Since your mind is worldly bent,
Therefore of the two gifts in my dispose,
Think ere you speak, I grant you leave to choose. Dryden.

WORM.† n. s. [pýpm, Saxon; worm, Dutch; vermis, Lat.]

1. A small harmless serpent that lives in the earth.

Both the princes
Thy broken faith hath made a prey to worms. Shakspeare.

Help me into some house,
Or I shall faint; — a plague o' both your houses!
They have made worms' meat of me. Shakspeare.

Though worms devour me, though I turn to mold,
Yet in my flesh I shall his face behold:

I from my marble monument shall rise
Again intire, and see him with these eyes. Sandys, Paraphr.
At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Insect or worm. Milton, P. L.

2. A poisonous serpent.
The mortal worm. Shakspeare.

3. Animal bred in the body.

4. The animal that spins silk. Silkworm.
Thou owest the worm no silk, the sheep no wool. Shakspeare.

5. Grubs that gnaw wood and furniture.
'Tis no awkward claim,
Pick'd from the worm-holes of long-vanish'd days,
Nor from the dust of old oblivion rak'd. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

6. Something tormenting.
The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul! Shakspeare.
Chains of darkness, and the undying worm. Milton, P. L.

7. Any thing vermiculated, or turned round; any thing spiral.
The threads of screws, when bigger than can be made in screw-plates, are called worms. The length of a worm begins at the one end of the spindle, and ends at the other; the breadth of the worm is contained between any two grooves on the spindle; the depth of the worm is cut into the diameter of the spindle, viz. the depth between the outside of the worm, and the bottom of the groove. Moxon.

8. A supposed membrane or ligament under the tongue of a dog. See the second meaning of To WORM.
When you see a mad dog step aside out of his walk only to bite somebody, and then return to it again, you had best ask him the reason why he did so? Why, the reason is that he is mad, and his worm will not let him be quiet, without doing mischief, when he has opportunity. South, Serm. x. 162.

To WORM. v. n. [from the noun.] To work slowly, secretly, and gradually.
When debates and fretting jealousy,
Did worm and work within you more and more,
Your colour faded. Herbert.

To WORM. v. a.
1. To drive by slow and secret means, perhaps as by a screw.
They find themselves wormed out of all power, by a new spawn of independents, sprung from your own bowels. Swift.

2. To deprive a dog of something, nobody knows what, under his tongue, which is said to prevent him, nobody knows why, from running mad.
Every one that keepeth a dog, should have him wormed. Mortimer.

WO'RMEAT.† } WO'RMEATEN. } adj. [worm and eaten.]
1. Gnawed by worms.
For his verity in love, I do think him as concave as a covered goblet, or a wormeaten nut. Shakspeare.

2. Old; worthless.
His chamber all was hanged about with rolls,
And old records from antient times deriv'd;
Some made in books, some in long parchment scrolls,
That were all wormeaten, and full of canker holes. Spenser.
Wormeat stories of old times. Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 4.
Things among the Greeks, which antiquity had worn out of knowledge, were called ogygia, which we call wormeaten, or of defaced date. Ralegh, Hist. of the World.
Thine's like wormeaten trunks cloath'd in seal's skin;
Or grave, that's dust without, and stink within. Donne.

WORMEA'TENNESS.* n. s. State of being wormeaten; rottenness.
By the ceasing of the teeth, we must understand all those infirmities that are incident to them by reason of age, whether looseness, hollowness, rottenness, wormeatenness, &c. Smith on Old Age, p. 85.

WO'RMWOOD. n. s. [from its virtue to kill worms in the body; perhaps properly wormwort.] A plant.
Wormwood hath an indeterminate stalk, branching out into many small shoots, with spikes of naked flowers hanging downward; the leaves are hoary and bitter. Of this plant there are thirty-two species, one of which, the common wormwood, grows in the roads; but it is also planted in gardens for common use. Great variety of sea wormwoods are found in the salt marshes of England, and sold in the markets for the true Roman wormwood, though they differ greatly. Miller.
She was wean'd; I had then laid
Wormwood to my dug. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.
Pituitous Cacochymia must be corrected by bitters, as wormwood wine. Floyer on the Humours.
I ask whether one be not invincibly conscious to himself of a different perception, when he actually tastes wormwood, or only thinks on that savour. Locke.

WO'RMY.† adj. [from worm.]
1. Full of worms.
Spirits that in crossways and floods have burial,
Already to their wormy beds are gone. Shakspeare.
Yet can I not persuade me thou art dead,
Or that thy corse corrupts in earth's dark womb;
Or that thy beauties lie in wormy bed. Milton, Ode.

2. Earthy; groveling.
By greatness of mind we are brought to a just contempt of sordid and wormy affections.
Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 37.

WORN. part. pass. of wear. Worn out is quite consumed.
His is a maiden shield,
Guiltless in fight: mine batter'd, hew'd and bor'd,
Worn out of service, must forsake his lord. Dryden.
What I now offer, is the wretched remainder of a sickly age, worn out with study, and oppress'd by fortune. Dryden.
The greatest part of mankind are given up to labour, whose lives are worn out only in the provisions for living. Locke.
Your cold hypocrisy's a stale device,
A worn-out trick; would'st thou be thought in earnest,
Cloath thy feign'd zeal in rage, in fire, in fury. Addison.

WO'RNIL. n. s.
In the backs of cows in the summer, are maggots generated, which in Essex we call wornils, being first only a small knot in the skin.
Derham, Phys. Theol.

WO'RRIER.* n. s. [from worry.] One who worries or torments.
More material and coarser sort of dæmons, conceived the worriers of souls. Spencer on Prod. (1665,) p. 229.

To WO'RRY.† v. a. [ƿoꞃızan, Saxon, depopulari; cognatum, sine dubio, Su. Goth. warg, wargr, lupus, latro: à Germ. wurgen, trucidare, premere, strangulare. Serenius. The old word seems to be in the following passage: "To werre each other, and to slay." Gower, Conf. Am. B. 3.]
1. To tear, or mangle, as a beast tears its prey.
If we with thrice such powers left at home,
Cannot defend our own doors from the dog;
Let us be worried. Shakspeare, Hen. V.
The fury of the tumults might fly so high as to worry and tear those in pieces, whom as yet they but play'd with in their paws. King Charles.
'Tis no new thing for the dogs that are to keep the wolves from worrying the sheep, to be deliver'd up to the enemy, for fear the sheep should worry the wolves. L'Estrange.

This revives and imitates that inhuman barbarity of the old heathen persecutors, wrapping up christians in the skins of wild beasts, that so they might be worried and torn in pieces by dogs. South, Serm.

2. To harass, or persecute brutally.

Then embraces his son-in-law; then again worries he his daughter with clipping her. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

For want of words, or lack of breath,
Witness when I was worried with thy peals. Milton, S. A.

It has pleased Providence at length to give us righteousness instead of exaction, and hopes of religion to a church worried with reformation. South, Serm.

All his care
Was to preserve me from the barbarous rage,
Which worried him only for being mine. Southern.

I shall not suffer him to worry any man's reputation, nor indeed fall on any person whatsoever. Addison.

Let them rail,
And worry one another at their pleasure. Rowe.

Madam, contrive and invent,
And worry him out, till he gives his consent. Swift.

WORSE.† adj. The comparative of bad: bad, worse, worst. [ƿyꞃꞅ, Saxon; wairs, M. Goth.] More bad; more ill.

Why should he see your faces worse liking than the children of your sort? Daniel, i. 10.

In happiness and misery, the question still remains, how men come often to prefer the worse to the better, and to chuse that, which, by their own confession, has made them miserable. Locke.

WORSE. adv. In a manner more bad.

The more one sickens, the worse at ease he is. Shakspeare.

The WORSE. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The loss; not the advantage; not the better.

Was never man, who most conquests atchiev'd,
But sometimes had the worse, and lost by war. Spenser.

Judah was put to the worse before Israel; and they fled to their tents. 2 Kings, xiv. 12.

2. Something less good.

A man, whatever are his professions, always thinks the worse of a woman, who forgives him for making an attempt on her virtue. Richardson, Clarissa.

To WORSE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To put to disadvantage. This word, though analogical enough, is not now used.

Perhaps more valid arms,
Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
May serve to better us, and worse our foes. Milton, P. L.

To WO'RSEN.* v. a. [from worse.] To worse.

It worsens and slugs the most learned. Milton, Of Ref. in Engl. B. 1.

WO'RSER. adj. A barbarous word, formed by corrupting worse with the usual comparative termination.

Gods! take my breath from me:
Let not my worser spirit tempt me again
To die before you please. Shakspeare.

A dreadful quiet felt, and worser far
Than arms, a sullen interval of war. Dryden.

WO'RSHIP. n. s. [ƿeoꞃðꞅcype, Saxon.]

1. Dignity; eminence; excellence.

Elfin born of noble state,
And muckle worship in his native land,
Well could he tourney, and in lists debate. Spenser.

My train are men of choice, and rarest parts,
That all particulars of duty know;
And in the most exact regard support
The worship of their names. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Thou madest him lower than the angels, to crown him with glory and worship. Ps. viii. 5.

2. A character of honour.

I belong to worship, and effect
In honour, honesty. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

3. A title of honour.

My quondam barber, but his worship now. Dryden.

4. A term of ironical respect.

Against your worship, when had S—k writ?
Or P—ge pour'd forth the torrent of his wit? Pope.

5. Adoration; religious act of reverence.

They join their vocal worship to the quire
Of creatures wanting voice. Milton, P. L.

Under the name of church, I understand a body, or collection of human persons professing faith in Christ, gathered together in several places of the world for the worship of the same God, and united into the same corporation. Pearson.

He wav'd a torch aloft, and, madly vain,
Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryden.

The worship of God is an eminent part of religion, and prayer is a chief part of religious worship: hence religion is described by seeking God. Tillotson.

There was a voyage of the Egyptians under Osiris up the Danube; from them the Suevi had their worship of Isis. Arbuthnot.

6. Honour; respect; civil deference.

The humble guest shall have worship in the presence of those who sit at meat with him. St. Luke, xiv. 10.

Since God hath appointed government among men, it is plain that his intention was, that some kind of worship should be given from some to others; for where there is a power to punish and reward, there is a foundation of worship in those who are under that power; which worship lies in expressing a due regard to that power, by a care not to provoke it, and an endeavour to obtain the favour of it, which, among mankind, is called civil worship. Stillingfleet.

7. Idolatry of lovers; submissive respect.

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eyeballs, nor your cheek of cream
That can entame my spirits to your worship. Shakspeare.

To WO'RSHIP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adore; to honour or venerate with religious rites.

Thou shalt worship no other God. Exod. xxxiv. 14.

WO'RSHIPFUL. adj. [worship and full.]

1. Claiming respect by any character or dignity.

This is worshipful society,
And fits the mounting spirit like myself. Shakspeare.

When old age comes upon him, it comes alone, bringing no other evil with it; but when it comes to wait upon a great and worshipful sinner, who for many years has ate well and done ill, it is attended with a long train of rheums. South.

2. A term of ironical respect.

Every man would think me an hypocrite; and what excites your most worshipful thought to think so? Shakspeare.

Suppose this worshipful idol be made, yet still it wants sense and motion. Stillingfleet.

Wo'rshipfully. adv. [from worshipful.] Respectfully.

Hastings will lose his head, ere give consent,
His master's son, as worshipfully he terms it,
Shall lose the royalty of England's throne. Shakspeare.

Wo'rshipper. n. s. [from worship.] Adorer; one that worships.

What art thou, thou idol ceremony?
What kind of god art thou that suffer'st more
Of mortal griefs, than do thy worshippers. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Those places did not confine the immensity of God, nor give his worshippers a nearer approach to heaven by their height. South, Serm.

If posterity takes its notions of us from our medals, they must fancy one of our kings paid a great devotion to Minerva, that another was a professed worshipper of Apollo. Addison.

By sanctifying the seventh day after they had laboured six, they avowed themselves worshippers of that only God, who created heaven and earth. Nelson.

Worst. adj. [The superlative of bad, formed from worse: bad, worse, worst.] Most bad; most ill.

If thou hadst not been born the worst of men,
Thou hadst been knave and flatterer. Shakspeare.

The pain that any one actually feels is still of all other the worst; and it is with anguish they cry out. Locke.

Worst. n. s. The most calamitous or wicked state; the utmost height or degree of any thing ill.

Who is't can say, I'm at the worst?
I'm worse than e'er I was,
And worse I may be yet: the worst is not,
So long as we can say, this is the worst. Shakspeare.

That you may be armed against the worst in this unhappy state of affairs in our distressed country, I send you these considerations on the nature and immortality of the soul. Digby.

Happy the man, and happy he alone,
He, who can call to-day his own:
He who secure within can say,
To-morrow do thy worst, for I have liv'd to-day. Dryden.

Sir Roger gets into the frontiers of his estate, before he beats about in search of a hare, on purpose to spare his own fields, where he is always sure of finding diversion when the worst comes to the worst. Addison, Spect.

To Worst. v. a. [from the adjective.] To defeat; to overthrow.

The case will be no worse than where two duellists enter the field, where the worsted party hath his sword given him again without further hurt. Suckling.

The bear was in a greater fright,
Beat down and worsted by the knight. Hudibras.

It is downright madness to contend where we are sure to be worsted. L'Estrange.

2. Excellence; virtue.

How can you him unworthy then decree;
In whose chief part your worths implanted be. Sidney.

Is there any man of worth and virtue, although not instructed in the school of Christ, that had not rather end the days of this transitory life as Cyrus, than to sink down with them of whom Elihu hath said, memento moriuntur? Hooker.

Having from these suck'd all they had of worth,
And brought home that faith which you carried forth,
I throughly love. Donne.

Her virtue, and the conscience of her worth
That would be woo'd. Milton, P. L.

A nymph of your own train
Gives us your character in such a strain,
As none but she, who in that court did dwell,
Could know such worth, or worth describe so well. Waller.

Detected worth, like beauty disarray'd,
To covert flies, of praise itself afraid. Young.

3. Importance; valuable quality.

Peradventure those things whereupon time was then well spent, have sithence lost their dignity and worth. Hooker.

Take a man possessed with a strong desire of any thing, and the worth and excellency of that thing appears much greater than when that desire is quite extinguished. South.

Worth. adj.

1. Equal in price to; equal in value to.

Women will love her that she is a woman,
More worth than any man: men that she is
The rarest of all women. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Chiding the worthless crowd away. Roscommon.

2. Having no value.

Anxious pains we all the day,
In search of what we like, employ:
Scorning at night the worthless prey,
We find the labour gave the joy. Prior.

Am I then doom'd to fall
By a boy's hand? and for a worthless woman? Addison.

WO'RTHLESSNESS. n. s. [from worthless.] Want of excellence; want of dignity; want of value.

But that mine own worthlessness spoils the conceit, I could think our company parallel to the seven wise men of Greece. More, Div. Dialogues.

A notable account is given us by the apostle of this windy insignificant charity of the will, and of the worthlessness of it, not enlivened by deeds. South, Serm.

WO'RTHY. adj. [from worth.]

1. Deserving; such as merits: with of before the thing deserved.

She determined never to marry any but him, whom she thought worthy of her, and that was one in whom all worthinesses were harboured. Sidney.

Further, I will not flatter you,
That all I see in you is worthy love,
Than this; that nothing do I see in you
That should merit hate. Shakspeare, K. John.

Thou art worthy of the sway,
To whom the heav'ns in thy nativity
Adjudg'd an olive branch and laurel crown. Shakspeare.

2. Valuable; noble; illustrious; having excellence or dignity.

If the best things have the perfectest and best operations, it will follow, that seeing man is the worthiest creature on earth, and every society of men more worthy than any man, and of society that most excellent which we call the church. Hooker.

He now on Pompey's basis lies along,
No worthier than the dust? Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles in point of religion and honour; though hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon.

More water glideth by the mill
Than wots the miller of. Shakspeare.
Wot you, what I found?
Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing. Shakspeare.

WOVE. The preterite and participle passive of weave.

Adam, waiting her return, had wove
Of choicest flowers, a garland. Milton, P. L.

WO'VEN. † The participle passive of weave.

No man living
Could say, that is my wife there: all were woven
So strangely in one piece. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

WOULD. The preterite of will.

1. It is generally used as an auxiliary verb with an infinitive, to which it gives the force of the subjunctive mood.

If God's providence did not so order it, cheats would daily be committed, which would justle private men out of their rights, and unhinge states. Ray.

2. I WOULD do it. My resolution is that it should be done by me.

Thou WOULDEST do it. Such must be the consequence to thee; that such should be thy act.

He WOULD or it would. This must be the consequence to him or it; that such should be his act, or its effect.

3. The plural as the singular.

To themselves they live,
And to their island, that enough would give
A good inhabitant. Chapman.

Mr. Slender, what would you with me?—
—I would little or nothing with you. Shakspeare.

6. Should wish.

Celia! if you apprehend
The muse of your incensed friend;
Nor would that he record your blame,
And make it live; repeat the same;
Again deceive him, and again,
And then he swears he'll not complain. Waller.

7. It is used in old authors for should.

The excess of diet would be avoided. Bacon.
As for percolation, which belongeth to separation, trial would be made by clarifying by adhesion, with milk put into new beer and stirred with it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

8. It has the signification of I wish, or I pray, this, I believe, is improper; and formed by a gradual corruption of the phrase, would God; which originally imported, that God would, might God will; might God decree; from this phrase ill understood came would to God; thence, I would to God: and thence I would, or elliptically, would, came to signify, I wish; and so it is used even in good authors, but ought not to be imitated.

I would my father look'd but with my eyes. Shakspeare.
I would this musick would come.
I, this sound I better know. Shakspeare.
Wise men will do it without a law; I would there might be a law to restrain fools. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.
List! I would I could hear mo. B. Jonson.
Would to heaven, that youth such spirit did feed
Now in my nerves; and that my joynts were knit
With such a strength, as made me then held fit
To lead men with Ulysses. Chapman.
This is yet the outward, fairest side
Of our design: within rests more of fear
Than my most worthy lords, I would there were. Daniel.
Would thou hadst hearken'd to my words, and stay'd
With me, as I besought thee, when that strange
Desire of wand'ring, this unhappy morn,
Would God we might prevent the need of such unkindly expedients, and by a thankful sense of what we have, provide to conserve it. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

WRAITH.* n. s. [perhaps a corruption of swarth or swairth, which see.] The apparition of a person about to die, as pretended in parts of the north. Grose.

The wraith or spectral appearance of a person shortly to die, is a firm article in the creed of Scottish superstition. Nor is it unknown to our sister kingdom. See the story of the beautiful Lady Diana Rich, in Aubrey's Miscell. p. 89. Scott, Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, p. cxxxvi.

To WRA'NGLE.† v. n. [Minsheu derives it from wrang, wrangen. Teut. bitter, q. d. to be embittered against one; Skinner, from wrong; and to this latter derivation Serenius refers, ranglegur, Goth. improbus, wraeng, Sueth. perversus. It may be at least amusing to see what the enlarged Expositor of Bullokar, in 1656, says on this point, under wariangles, certain birds which are mentioned by Chaucer. "Wariangles a kind of ravenous birds, and full of noise, whence happily our word wrangling for cavilling; more likely than, what some will, from the Belgick wrangen, i. e. astringere. We sometimes call it brangling!"] To dispute peevishly; to quarrel perversely; to altercate; to squabble.

Yes, for a score of kingdoms you should wrangle,
And I would call it fair play. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Some unhatch'd practice
Hath puddled his clear spirit; and in such cases,
Men's natures wrangle with inferiour things,
Though great ones are their object. Shakspeare, Othello.

How wounding a spectacle is it to see those who were by Christ designed for fishers of men, picking up shells on the shore, and unmanly wrangling about them too? Dec. of Chr. Piety.

In incompleat ideas we impose on ourselves, and wrangle with others. Locke.

Amongst unthinking men, who examine not scrupulously ideas, but confound them with words, there must be endless dispute and wrangling. Locke.

His great application to the law had not infected his temper with any thing litigious; he did not know what it was to wrangle on indifferent points. Addison, Freeholder.

Fill'd with the sense of age, the fire of youth,
A scorn of wrangling, yet a zeal for truth. Pope.

And all the question, wrangle e'er so long,
Is only this, if God has plac'd him wrong. Pope.

He advises therefore to set aside all logical wranglings, and to produce the testimonies of the antients. Waterland.

Things reflected on, in gross and transiently, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty in them, and are thought to be wrapped up in impenetrable obscurity. Locke.

5. [It is often corruptly written for rap or rape, from rapio, Latin.] To snatch up miraculously.

Whatever things were discovered to St. Paul, when he was wrapped up into the third heaven, all the description he makes is, that there are such things as eye hath not seen, ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive. Locke.

6. To transport; to put in ecstasy: for rapt.

Much more the reverent sire prepar'd to say,
Wrapp'd with his joy; how the two armies lay. Cowley.

7. [Perhaps the following passage should properly be rapped; though wrapped is now frequently used in this sense.]

Wrapt up in silent fear he lies. Waller.

Wrap'd in amaze the matrons wildly stare. Dryden.

WRA'PPER. n. s. [from wrap.]

1. One that wraps.

2. That in which any thing is wrapped.

My arms were pressed to my sides, and my legs closed together by so many wrappers, that I looked like an Egyptian mummy. Addison, Spect.

WRA'PPING.* n. s. [from wrap.] That in which any thing is wrapped.

The sheep, that is near at hand, gives us shelter enough from the cold; why should we hunt after more costly furs and wrappings? Bp. Rainbow, Serm. (1635,) p. 15.

WRATH.† n. s. [ꝩꞃað, Saxon; wrede, Danish; wreed, cruel, Dutch. Dr. Johnson. — Serenius adds wrede, Sueth. reide, Icel. ira, reidr, iratus; and deduces it from reita, irritare. Mr. Horne Tooke pronounces it the past participle of the Saxon ꝩꞃiðan, torquere, to writhe.] Anger; fury; rage.

Thou dost the prayers of the righteous seed
Present before the majesty divine,
And his avenging wrath to clemency incline. Spenser.

With one fool's head I came to woo,
But I go away with two:
Sweet, adieu! I'll keep my oath,
Patiently to bear my wrath. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

I fear, lest there be debates, envyings, wraths, strifes. 2 Cor. xii. 20.

He hop'd not to escape, but shun
The present, fearing guilty what his wrath
Might suddenly inflict. Milton.

Achilles' wrath, to Greece the direful spring
Of woes unnumber'd, heav'nly goddess, sing. Pope.

WRA'THFUL. adj. [wrath and full.] Angry; furious; raging.

He cry'd, as raging seas are wont to roar,
When wintry storm his wrathful wreck doth threat. Spenser.

Fly from wrath:
Sad be the sights, and bitter fruits of war,
And thousand furies wait on wrathful swords. Spenser.

How now, your wrathful weapons drawn! Shakspeare.

The true evangelical zeal should abound more in the mild and good-natured affections, than the vehement and wrathful passions. Sprat, Serm.

WRA'THFULLY. adv. [from wrathful.] Furiously; passionately.

——— Gentle friends,
Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully. Shakspeare.

WRA'THLESS. adj. [from wrath.] Free from anger.

Fearless and wrathless, while they heard him play. Waller.

To WRAWL. v. n. To cry as a cat.

Some were of dogs that barked day and night,
And some of cats that wrawling still did cry. Spenser, F. Q. vi. xii. 27.

To quiet and make still his wrauling cries. Anderson, Expos. of Benedict. (1573,) fol. 30.

To WREAK. v. a. Old preterite and part. pass. wroke and wroken; now wreaked. It is likely that the word wrought, which is only used in the past tense, is originally the preterite of wreak. [ꝩꞃæcan, Saxon; wrecken, Dutch; recken, German.]

1. To revenge.

In an ill hour thy foes thee hither sent,
Another's wrongs to wreak upon thyself. Spenser.

Him all that while occasion did provoke
Against Pyrocles, and new matter fram'd
Upon the old, him stirring to be wroke
Of his late wrongs. Spenser.

Pale death our valiant leader hath opprest,
Gome wreak his loss, whom bootless ye complain. Fairfax.

You could pursue
The son of Perops then, and did the goddess stir
That villainy to wreak the tyrant did to her. Drayton.

2. To execute any violent design. This is the sense in which it is now used.

On me let death wreak all his rage. Milton, P. L.

He left the dame,
Resolv'd to spare her life, and save her shame,
But that detested object to remove,
To wreak his vengeance, and to cure her love. Dryden.

Think how you drove him hence, a wand'ring exile,
To distant climes, then think what certain vengeance
His rage may wreak on your unhappy orphan. Smith.

Her husband scour'd away,
To wreak his hunger on the destin'd prey. Pope.

3. It is corruptly written for reck, to heed; to care.

My master is of churlish disposition,
And little wreaks to find the way to heav'n
By doing deeds of hospitality. Shakspeare, As you like it.

WREAK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Revenge; vengeance. Obsolete.

Fortune, mine avowed foe,
Her wrathful wreaks themselves do now allay. Spenser.

Join with the Goths, and with revengeful war
Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the traitor Saturnine. Tit. Andron.

Some ill's behind, rude swaine, for thee to beare;
That fear'd not to devoure thy guests, and breake
All laws of humanes: Jove sends therefore wreake. Chapman.

2. Passion; furious fit. Obsolete.

What and if
His sorrows have so overwhelm'd his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wreaks,
His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness? Tit. Andron.

WRE'AKFUL. adj. [from wreak.] Revengeful; angry. Not in use.

Call the creatures,
Whose naked natures live in all the spite
Of wreakful heaven. Shakspeare.

She in Olympus top
Must visit Vulcan for new arms, to serve her wreakful son. Chapman, Iliad.

WRE'AKLESS. adj. [I know not whether this word be miswritten for reckless, careless; or comes from wreak, revenge, and means unrevenging.]

So flies the wreakless shepherd from the wolf;
So first the harmless flock doth yield his fleece,
And next his throat unto the butcher's knife. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

WREATH.† n. s. [ꝩꞃeoð, Saxon, from ꝩꞃıðan, torquere. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. Any thing curled or twisted.

The wreath of three was made a wreath of five: to these three first titles of the two houses, were added the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Clouds began
To darken all the hill, and smoke to roll
In dusky wreaths reluctant flames. Milton, P. L.

He of his tortuous train

Let altars smoak,
And richest gums, and spice, and incense roll
Their fragrant wreaths to heav'n. Smith, Phæd. and Hip.

2. A garland; a chaplet.

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Dropp'd from his head, a wreath lay on the ground. Roscommon.

The boughs of Lotos, form'd into a wreath,
This monument, thy maiden beauty's due,
High on a plane-tree shall be hung to view. Dryden.

When for thy head the garland I prepare,
A second wreath shall bind Aminta's hair;
And when my choicest songs thy worth proclaim,
Alternate verse shall bless Aminta's name. Prior.

To WREATH.† v. a. pret. wreathed; part. pass. wreathed, wreathen. [ꝩꞃıðan, Sax.]

1. To curl; to twist; to convolve.

Longaville
Did never sonnet for her sake compile,
Nor ever laid his wreathed arms athwart
His loving bosom to keep down his heart. Shakspeare.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who, with her head, nimble in threats approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away. Shakspeare, As you like it.

The beard of an oat is wreathed at the bottom, and one smooth entire straw at the top: they take only the part that is wreathed, and cut off the other. Bacon.

2. It is here used for, to writhe.

Impatient of the wound,
He rolls and wreaths his shining body round:
Then headlong shoots beneath the dashing tide. Gay.

3. To interweave; to entwine one in another.

Two chains of pure gold of wreathen work shalt thou make them, and fasten the wreathen chains to the ouches. Ex. xxviii.

As snakes breed in dunghills not singly, but in knots; so in such base noisome hearts you shall ever see pride and ingratitude indivisibly wreathed and twisted together. South.

4. To encircle as a garland.

In the flow'rs that wreathe the sparkling bowl,
Fell adders hiss, and pois'nous serpents rowl. Prior.

5. To encircle as with a garland; to dress in a garland.

For thee she feeds her hair,
And with thy winding ivy wreathes her lance. Dryden.

The soldier, from successful camps returning,
With laurel wreath'd, and rich with hostile spoil,
Severs the bull to Mars. Prior.

To WREATH. v. n. To be interwoven; to be intertwined.

Here, where the labourer's hands have form'd a bow'r
Of wreathing trees, in singing waste an hour. Dryden.

WRE'ATHY.† adj. [from wreath.]

1. Spiral; curled; twisted.

That which is preserved at St. Dennis, near Paris, hath wreathy spires, and cochleary turnings about, which agreeth with the description of an unicorn's horn in Ælian. Brown.

2. Covered with a wreath.

Less mild the Bachanalian dames appear,
When from afar their mighty god they hear,
And howl about the hills, and shake their wreathy spear. Dryden, Æn.

WRECK.† n. s. [ꝩꞃæcce, Saxon, a miserable person; wracke, Dutch, a ship broken. From wrikan, Goth. ꝩꞃıcan, Sax. persequi, affligere, lædere, perdere. Serenius, and Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. Destruction by being driven on rocks or shallows at sea; destruction by sea.

Fair be ye sure; but hard and obstinate,
As is a rock amidst the raging floods;
'Gainst which a ship, of succour desolate,
Doth suffer wreck both of herself and goods. Spenser.

Like those that see their wreck
Ev'n on the rocks of death; and yet they strain,
That death may not them idly find t' attend
To their uncertain task, but work to meet their end. Daniel.

Think not that flying fame reports my fate;
I present, I appear, and my own wreck relate. Dryden.

2. Dissolution by violence.

Not only Paradise,
In this commotion, but the starry cope
Had gone to wreck. Milton, P. L.

The soul shall flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amidst the war of elements,
The wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds. Addison.

3. Ruin; destruction.

Whether he was
Combin'd with Norway, or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage; or that with both
He labour'd in his country's wreck, I know not. Shakspeare.

4. It is misprinted here for wreak.

He cry'd as raging seas are wont to roar,
When wintry storm his wrathful wreck doth threat. Spenser.

5. The thing wrecked: as, the ship was considered as a wreck.

That most ungrateful boy there by your side
From the rude sea's enrag'd and foamy mouth
Did I redeem; a wreck past hope he was.
Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

6. Dead, undigested stems of grasses and weeds in a ploughed land. Norfolk. Grose.

To WRECK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To destroy by dashing on rocks or sands.

Have there been any more such tempests, wherein she hath wretchedly been wrecked? Spenser on Ireland.

A pilot's thumb,
Wreck'd as homeward he did come. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The coral found growing upon wrecked ships and lost anchors, that are daily dragged up out of the sea, demonstrates that coral continues to be formed to this day. Woodward.

2. To ruin.

Weak and envy'd, if they should conspire,
They wreck themselves, and he hath his desire. Daniel.

3. In the following passages it is ignorantly used for wreak, in its different senses of revenge and execute.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen. Shakspeare.

I faint! I die! the goddess cry'd:
O cruel, could'st thou find none other
To wreck thy spleen on? Parricide!
Like Nero, thou hast slain thy mother. Prior.

To WRECK. v. n. To suffer wreck.

With manlier objects we must try
His constancy, with such as have more shew
Of worth, of honour, glory, and popular praise,
Rocks whereon greatest men have oftest wreck'd. Milton, P. R.

WRE'CKFUL.* adj. [wreck and full.] Causing wreck.

Thereto they us'd one most accursed order,
To eate the flesh of men whom they mote fynde,
And strangers to devoure, which on their border
Were brought by error, or by wreckfull wynde. Spenser, F. Q.

WREN. n. s. [ƿrenna, Saxon; regulus, Lat.] A small bird.

The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

All ages have conceived that the wren is the least of birds, yet the discoveries of America have shewed us one far less, the hum-bird not much exceeding a beetle. Brown.

To WRENCH.† v. a. [ƿrinȝan, Saxon; wrenghen, Dutch; old Engl. raunch. "Hasting to raunch the arrow out." Spenser, Shep. Cal. Aug.]

1. To pull by violence; to wrest; to force.

Wrench his sword from him. Shakspeare, Othello.

Oh form!
How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit,
Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls
To thy false seeming! Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Give me that mattock and the wrenching iron. Shakspeare.

Cæsar's army, wanting something, demanded a mission or discharge, with no intention it should be granted; but thought by that means to wrench him to their other desires. Bacon.

Sing the Parthian, when transfix'd he lies,
Wrenching the Roman jav'lin from his thighs. Dryden.

Struggling to get loose, I broke the strings, and wrenched out the pegs that fastened my arm to the ground. Swift.

2. To sprain; to distort.

O most small fault!
How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show?
Which, like an engine, wrencht my frame of nature
From the fix'd place; drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

You wrenched your foot against a stone, and were forced to stay. Swift.

WRENCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A violent pull or twist.

2. A sprain.

Some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench, the whole leg thereby loses its strength. Locke.

3. Wrenches, in Chaucer, signifies means, sleights, subtilties; which is, I believe, the sense here.

He resolved to make his profit of this business of Britain, as a quarrel for war; and that of Naples as a wrench and mean for peace. Bacon, Hen. VII.

To WREST.† v. a. [ƿræſtan, Sax.]

1. To twist by violence; to extort by writhing or force.

To wring this sentence, to wrest thereby out of men's hands the knowledge of God's doctrine, is without all reason.
Ascham.

To what wretched state reserv'd,
Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n,
To be thus wrested from us? Milton, P. L.

Where you charged in person, you were a conqueror: the rebels afterwards recovered strength, and wrested that victory from others that they had lost to you. Dryden.

Our country's cause,
That drew our swords, now wrests 'em from our hand,
And bids us not delight in Roman blood,
Unprofitably shed. Addison, Cato.

O prince, I blush to think what I have said;
But fate has wrested the confession from me. Addison.

2. To distort; to writhe; to force.

So far to extend their speeches, is to wrest them against their meaning. Hooker.

My father's purposes have been mistook,
And some about him have too lavishly
Wrested his meaning and authority. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Wrest once the law to your authority;
To do a great right, do a little wrong. Shakspeare.

3. To wind; to screw: applied to the tuning of instruments. Obsolete. Minsheu.

The claricord hath a tunely kynde,
As the wyre is wrested high and lowe. Skelton, Poems, p. 291.

WREST.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Distortion; violence.

Whereas it is concluded, out of weak premises, that the retaining of divers things in the church of England, which other reformed churches have cast out, must needs argue that we do not well, unless we can shew that they have done ill: what needed this wrest, to draw out from us an accusation of foreign churches? Hooker.

2. It is used in Spenser for an active or moving power; I suppose, from the force of a tilter acting with his lance in his rest.

Adown he kest it with so puissant wrest,
That back again it did aloft rebound,
And gave against his mother earth a gronefull sound. Spenser.

*3 An instrument to tune. Dr. Johnson had placed the following example from Shakspeare under the preceding sense. But Mr. Douce has abundantly shewn that it belongs to this. Illustr. of Shaksp. ii. 61.

The minstrel tempered a string or two with his wrest.
Laneham, Lett. from Kenilworth, (1575.)

Antenor is such a wrest in their affairs,
That their negotiations all must slacken,
Wanting his manage. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

WRE'STER.† n. s. [from wrest.] One who wrests; one who uses a wrest.

Any instrument mistunyd shall hurt a true song,
Yet blame not the claricord the wrester doth wrong.
Skelton, Poems, p. 291.

To WRE'STLE. v. n. [from wrest.]

1. To contend who shall throw the other down.

If ever he goes alone again, I'll never wrestle for prize more. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Another, by a fall in wrestling, started the end of the clavicle from the sternon. Wiseman, Surgery.

To play or wrestle well, it should be used with those that do it better. Temple.

None in the leap spring with so strong a bound,
Or firmer in the wrestling press the ground. Pope.

2. To struggle; to contend: followed by with.

I persuaded them, if they lov'd Benedick,
To wish him wrestle with affection,
And never to let Beatrice know of it. Shakspeare.

James knew not how to wrestle with desperate contingencies, and so abhorred to be entangled in such. Clarendon.

To WRE'STLE.* v. a. To overcome in wrestling.

Life recover'd had the reine,
And over-wrestled his strong enemy. Spenser, F. Q. i. vii. 24.

WRE'STLER. n. s. [from wrestle.]

1. One who wrestles; one who professes the athletick art.

When the young wrestlers at their sport grew warm,
Old Milo wept, to see his naked arm. Denham.

'Tis not from whom, but where we live;
The place does oft those graces give:
Great Julius, on the mountains bred,
A flock perhaps, or herd, had led;
He that the world subdu'd, had been
But the best wrestler on the green. Waller.

2. One who contends in wrestling.

So earnest with thy God, can no new care,
No sense of danger, interrupt thy prayer?
The sacred wrestler, till a blessing giv'n,
Quits not his hold, but halting conquers heav'n. Waller.

Two wrestlers help to pull each other down. Dryden

WRETCH.† n. s. [ƿrecca, ƿpæc, Sax. from ƿpecan, Goth. wrikan, persequi, affligere, punire, vindicare, ulcisci, lædere, perdere. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. A miserable mortal.

When I loved, I was a wretch. Accidence.

She weeps, and says her Henry is depos'd;
He smiles, and says his Edward is install'd;
That she, poor wretch, for grief can speak no more. Shakspeare.

The butcher takes away the calf,
And binds the wretch, and beats it when it strives. Shakspeare.

Illustrious wretch! repine not, nor reply:
View not what heav'n ordains with reason's eye;
For bright the object is, the distance is too high. Prior.

2. A worthless sorry creature.

Base-minded wretches, are your thoughts so deeply bemired in the trade of ordinary worldlings, as for respect of gain some paultry wool may yield you, to let so much time pass without knowing perfectly her estate? Sidney.

He now
Has these poor men in question: never saw I
Wretches so quake; they kneel, they kiss the earth,
Forswear themselves as often as they speak. Shakspeare.

Title of honour, worth and virtue's right,
Should not be given to a wretch so vile. Daniel, Civ. War.

When they are gone, a company of starved hungry wretches shall take their places. L'Estrange.

3. It is used by way of slight, or ironical pity, or contempt.

When soon away the wasp doth go;
Poor wretch was never frighted so:
He thought his wings were much too slow,
O'erjoy'd they so were parted. Drayton, Nymphid.

Then, if the spider find him fast beset,
She issues forth, and runs along her loom:
She joys to touch the captive in her net,
And drags the little wretch in triumph home. Dryden.

4. It is sometimes a word of tenderness, as we now say poor thing.

Chastened but thus, and thus his lesson taught,
The happy wretch she put into her breast. Sidney.

Excellent wretch. Shakspeare.

WRE'TCHED. adj. [from wretch.]

1. Miserable; unhappy.

These we should judge to be most miserable, but that a wretcheder sort there are, on whom, whereas nature hath bestowed ripe capacity, their evil disposition seriously goeth about therewith to apprehend God, as being not God. Hooker.

O cruel death! to those you are more kind,
Than to the wretched mortals left behind. Waller.

Why do'st thou drive me
To range all o'er a waste and barren place,
To find a friend? The wretched have no friends. Dryden.

2. Calamitous; afflictive.

3. Sorry; pitiful; paltry; worthless.

When God was served with legal sacrifices, such was the miserable and wretched condition of some men's minds, that the best of every thing they had, being culled out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor, starved, or diseased thing not worth the keeping, they thought it good enough for the altar of God. Hooker.

Affected noise is the most wretched thing,
That to contempt can empty scribblers bring. Roscommon.

Forgive the many failings of those who, with their wretched art, cannot arrive to those heights that you possess. Dryden.

4. Despicable; hatefully contemptible.

An adventure worthy to be remembered for th unused examples therein, as well of true natural goodness as of wretched ungratefulness. Sidney.

WRE'TCHEDLY. adv. [from wretched.]

1. Miserably; unhappily.

From these two wars, so wretchedly entered into, the duke's ruin took its date. Clarendon.

2. Meanly; despicably.

When such little shuffling arts come once to be ripped up, and laid open, how poorly and wretchedly must that man sneak, who finds himself guilty and baffled too? South.

WRE'TCHEDNESS. n. s. [from wretched.]

1. Misery; unhappiness; afflicted state.

My misery cannot be greater than it is: fear not the danger of my blind steps, I cannot fall worse than I am, and do not obstinately continue to infect thee with my wretchedness. Sidney.

He gan inquire
What hard mishap him brought to such distress,
And made that caitif's thrall the thrall of wretchedness. Spenser.

Clarion did at last decline
To lowest wretchedness; and is there then
Such rancor in the hearts of mighty men? Spenser.

When they are weary of wars, and brought down to extreme wretchedness, then they creep a little, and sue for grace, till they have recovered their strength again. Spenser.

I love not to see wretchedness o'ercharg'd,
And duty in his service perishing. Shakspeare.

We have with the feeling lost the very memory of such wretchedness as our forefathers endured by those wars, of all others the most cruel. Ralegh.

2. Pitifulness; despicableness.

WRE'TCHLESS. adj. [This is, by I know not whose corruption, written for reckless.] Careless; mindless; heedless.

For any man to put off his present repentance, on contemplation of a possibility that his latter repentance may serve the turn, is the most wretchless presumption, and hath no promise of mercy annexed to it. Hammond.

If persons of so circumspect a piety have been thus overtaken, what security can there be for our wretchless oscitancy? Gov. of the Tongue.

Wre'tchlessness. n. s. [from wretchless.] Carelessness.

The devil drives them into desperation, or into wretchlessness of unclean living. 39 Art. of Rel.

To Wrig. v. a. [pꞃiʒan, Sax.] To move to and fro; to rub; to shake; to put into quick motion.

The bore his taile wrygges
Against the hye bench. Skelton, Poems, p. 128.
Worms in sturdy pride
Do wrigge and wrest their parts divorc'd by knife.
More, Immort. of the Soul, ii. ii. 37.

To WRI'GGLE. v. n. [pꞃiʒan, Saxon; ruggelen, Dutch.] To move to and fro with short motions.

If sheep or thy lamb fall a wrigling with tail,
Go by and by search it, whiles help may prevail. Tusser.

The busy importunities of these extensional phantasms I look upon as contemptuously, as upon the quick wrigglings up and down of pismires. More.

The excellency of sawing is to keep in the line marked to be sawn, without wriggling on either side. Moxon.

To bed went the bridegroom and the bride:
Was never such an ill-pair'd couple ty'd;
Restless he toss'd, and tumbled to and fro,
And roll'd and wriggled farther off for woe. Dryden.
How wildly will ambition steer!
A vermin wriggling in th' usurper's ear. Dryden.

And both he and his successors would often wriggle in their seats as long as the cushion lasted. Swift.

To Wri'ggle. v. a. To put in a quick reciprocating motion; to introduce by shifting motion.

Ralpho was mounted now, and gotten
O'erthwart his beast with active vaulting,
Wriggling his body to recover
His seat, and cast his right leg over. Hudibras.

A slim thin-gutted fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a hen roost. L'Estrange.

Wri'ggle.† adj. [from the verb.] Pliant; flexible; moving to and fro.

My ragged ronts all shiver and shake;
They wont in the wind wagg their wriggle tails,
Peark as a peacoke, but nought it avails. Spenser.

Wright.† n. s. [pꞃihta, pẏꞃhta, Saxon. The third person of the indicative of pẏꞃcan, one that worketh. Mr. H. Tooke. See To Work.] A workman; an artificer; a maker; a manufacturer.

Nor place the neighbour Cyclops their delights,
In brave vermilion prow deckt ships; nor wrights
Usefull and skilfull. Chapman.

It is impossible duly to consider these things, without being rapt into admiration of the infinite wisdom of the Divine Architect, and contemning the arrogant pretences of the world and animal wrights, and much more the productions of chance. Cheyne.

The verb To write has the same sound with wright, a workman, right or equity, and rite or ceremony; but spelled very differently. Watts, Logick.

To WRING. v. a. preter. and part. pass. wringed and wrung. [pꞃinʒan, Saxon.]

1. To twist; to turn round with violence.

The priest shall wring off his head, and burnt it on the altar. Lev. i. 15.

2. To force by contortion; with a particle, as out.

He thrust the fleece together, and wringed the dew out of it, a bowl full of water. Judg. vi. 38.

The figure of a sturdy woman, done by Michael Angelo, washing and winding of linen cloths; in which act she wrings out the water that made the fountain. Wotton.

Apply mild detergents on pledgets of lint over it, with a compress wrung out. Wiseman.

3. To squeeze; to press.

In sleep I heard him say, sweet Desdemona,
Let us be wary, let us hide our loves!
And then, Sir, would he gripe and wring my hand. Shakspeare.

4. To writhe.

The silly owner of the goods
Weeps over them, and wrings his hapless hands. Shakspeare.

5. To pinch.

The king began to find where his shoe did wring him, and that it was his depressing the house of York that did rankle and fester the affections of his people. Bacon, Hen. VII.

If he had not been too much grieved, and wrung by an uneasy and streight fortune, he would have been an excellent man of business. Clarendon.

6. To force by violence; to extort.

I had rather coin my heart,
And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash
By any indirection. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.
Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To wring the widow from her custom'd right,
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath? Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
That which I must speak,
Must either punish me, not being believ'd,
Or wring redress from you. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.
Thirty spies,
Threatening cruel death, constrain'd the bride
To wring from me, and tell to them, my secret. Milton, S. A.

7. To harass; to distress; to torture.

He dives into the king's soul, and there scatters
Doubts, dangers, wringing of the conscience,
Fear and despair, and all these for his marriage. Shakspeare.
Pleasure enchants, impetuous rage transports,
And grief dejects and wrings the tortur'd soul. Roscommon.
Didst thou taste but half the griefs
That wring my soul, thou couldst not talk thus coldly. Addison.

8. To distort; to turn to a wrong purpose.

To wring this sentence, to wrest thereby out of men's hands the knowledge of God's doctrine, is without all reason. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Lord, how dare these men thus wring the Scriptures? Whitgift.

9. To persecute with extortion.

The merchant-adventurers have been often wronged and wringed to the quick; but were never quick and lively in thanks to those by whose endeavours they were freed. Hayward.

To Wring. v. n. To writhe with anguish.

'Tis all men's office to speak patience
To those that wring under the load of sorrow:
But no man's virtue nor sufficiency,
To be so moral when he shall endure
The like himself. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

WRI'NKLE. n. s. [pꞃincle, Saxon; wrinkel, Dutch.]

1. Corrugation or furrow of the skin or the face.

Give me that glass, and therein will I read:
No deeper wrinkles yet? Hath sorrow struck
So many blows upon this face of mine,
And made no deeper wounds? Shakspeare, Rich. II.

She hath continued a virgin without any visible token, or least wrinkle of old age. Howel, Voc. For.

To see a beggar's brat in riches flow,
Adds not a wrinkle to my even brow. Dryden.
Though you and all your senseless tribe,
Could art, or time, or nature bribe,
To make you look like beauty's queen,
And hold for ever at fifteen;
No bloom of youth can ever blind
The cracks and wrinkles of your mind:
All men of sense will pass your door,
And crowd to Stella's at four-score. Swift.

2. Rumple of cloth.

3. Any roughness.

Our British heaven was all serene;
No threat'ning cloud was nigh,
Not the least wrinkle to deform the sky. Dryden.

To WRI'NKLE. v. a. [ꝩꞃıncliꞇ, Saxon.]

1. To corrugate; to contract into furrows.

Writers are often more influenced by a desire of fame, than a regard to the publick good. Addison, Freeholder.

Would a writer know how to behave himself with relation to posterity, let him consider in old books what he finds that he is glad to know, and what omissions he most laments. Swift.

To WRITHE. v. a. [ƿpıðan, Saxon.]

1. To distort; to deform with distortion.

It cannot be this weak and writhed shrimp
Should strike such terror in his enemics. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

With hatefulest disrelish writh'd their jaws,
With soot and cinders fill'd. Milton, P. L.

Her mouth she writh'd, her forehead taught to frown,
Her eyes to sparkle fires to love unknown,
Her sallow cheeks her envious mind did shew,
And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the curstness of a shrew. Dryden.

2. To twist with violence.

Then Satan first knew pain,
And writh'd him to and fro convolv'd. Milton, P. L.

Amid' the plaited scales it took its course,
And in the spinal marrow spent its force;
The monster hiss'd aloud, and rag'd in vain,
And writh'd his body to and fro with pain;
He bit the dart. Addison.

3. To wrest; to force by violence; to torture; to distort.

The reason which he yieldeth, showeth the least part of his meaning to be that whereunto his words are writhed. Hooker.

4. To twist.

The King of heav'n
Bar'd his red arm, and launching from the sky
His writhen bolt, not shaking empty smoke,
Down to the deep abyss the flaming felon strook. Dryden.

To WRITHE. v. n. To be convolved with agony or torture.

Let each be broken on the rack;
Then, with what life remains, impaled, and left

XYLO'GRAPHY.* n. s. [xylographie, Fr.; from the Gr. ξύλον, wood, and γράφω, to write.] The art of engraving on wood. Of very recent usage.

Y.

Y, At the beginning of words, is commonly taken, though I think erroneously, for a consonant; at the end, and when it follows a consonant, is a vowel, and has the sound of i. It is used at the end of words, and whenever two i i's would come together; and in words derived from the Greek, to express the u. Y was much used by the Saxons, whence y is found for i in the old English writers.

Y is in old English sometimes prefixed as an increasing syllable to preterites, and passive participles of verbs. It seems borrowed from ȝe, the Saxon augmentum of the preterite. It is sometimes put before present tenses, but, I think, erroneously.

YACHT.† n. s. [a Dutch word.] A small ship for carrying passengers.

The evening before, we met, off the sound, Lord Sandwich in the Augusta yacht. Cook's Voyage.

YAM.* n. s. A root, that grows in America and the South Sea islands. Mason.

Both ships were by this time crowded with a great number of the natives, who brought with them cocoa-nuts, plantains, bananas, apples, yams, and other roots. Cook's Voyage.

To YAP.* v. n. [a contraction of yelp, or yaulp, as it was formerly written.] To bark.

A voice not unlike the yapping of a cur. L'Estrange, Tr. of Quev. p. 243.

YARD. n. s. [ȝeaрð, Saxon.]

1. Inclosed ground adjoining to an house.

One of the lions leaped down into a neighbour's yard, where, nothing regarding the crowing of the cocks, he eat them up. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Xanthus one day sent Æsop into the yard, and bade him look well about him. L'Estrange.

His wanton kids with budding horns prepar'd,
Fight harmless battles in his homely yard. Dryden.

2. [ȝерð, Saxon.] A measure of three feet.

A peer, a counsellor, and a judge, are not to be measured by the common yard, but by the pole of special grace. Bacon.

The arms, spread cross in a straight line, and measured from one end of the long finger on one hand, to that of the other; made a measure equal to the stature, and is named a fathom. Half of that, viz. from the end of the long finger of either arm, so spread, to the middle of the breast, is, with us, called a yard. Holder on Time.

An aqueduct of a Gothick structure, that conveys water from mount St. Francis to Spoletto, from the foundation of the lowest arch to the top, is two hundred and thirty yards. Addison.

3. The supports of the sails.

A breeze from shore began to blow;
The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row;
Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails
Let fall to court the wind. Dryden.

YA'RDLAND.* n. s. [yard and land.] A quantity of land, various, according to the place; as, at Wimbledon in Surrey it is but fifteen acres; in other counties, twenty; in some, twenty-four; in some, thirty; and in others, forty acres. Cowel.

YA'RDWAND. n. s. [yard and wand.] A measure of a yard.

All the revolutions in nature can give it nothing more than different degrees of dimensions. What affinity has thinking with such attributes? no more than there is between a syllogism and a yardwand. Collier.

YARE.† adj. [ȝeaрpe, Saxon; from ȝeaрpian, or ȝýрpan, to prepare. Mr. H. Tooke.] Ready; dextrous; nimble; eager.

Yare, yare, good Iros, quick; — methinks I hear
Antony call. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

I do desire to learn, Sir; and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your turn, you shall find me yare. Shakspeare.

The lesser [ship] will come and go, leave or take, and is yare: whereas the greater is slow. Raleigh.

YA'RELY. adv. [from yare.] Dextrously; skilfully.

The silken tackles,
Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands
That yarely frame the office. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To YARK.* See To YERK.

YARN.† n. s. [ȝeaрn, Saxon; the past participle of ȝýрnan, to prepare, to make ready. Mr. H. Tooke.] Spun wool; woollen thread.

You would be another Penelope; yet they say, all the yarn she spun in Ulysses's absence, did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Shakspeare, Coriol.

The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together; our virtues would be proud, if our faults whipt them not; and our crimes would despair, if they were not cherished by our virtues. Shakspeare.

Yarn is a commodity very proper to this country, which of all others ought to be most encouraged. Temple.

It may be useful for the reeling of yarn. Wilkins.

The fates but only spin the coarser clue,
The finest of the wool is left for you.

Spare me but one small portion of the twine,
And let the sisters cut below your line:
The rest among the rubbish may they sweep,
Or add it to the yarn of some old miser's heap. Dryden.

To YARR. v. n. [from the sound, hirrio, Lat.] To growl, or snarl like a dog. Ainsworth.

YA'RROW.† n. s. [millefolium, Lat.] A plant.

The yarrow, wherewithal he stops the wound-made gore. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

YATE.* n. s. [ʒeat, Sax.] Still our northern word for gate; pronounced yet, or yat.

Spar the yate fast. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

YAW.* n. s. The unsteady motion which a ship makes in a great swell, when, in steering, she inclines to the right or left of her course. Gifford's Massinger, iv. 297.

YAUL.† } n. s. A little vessel belonging to a ship,
YAWL. } for convenience of passing to and from it.

To YAWL.* v. n. [See To YELL.] To cry out.

There hideous Scyllas yawling round about,
There serpents hiss. Fairfax.
The pilot mainly calls,
Calls Jonah, Jonah: and yet louder yawls. Quarles, Hist. of Jon. (1620.)

To YAWN. v. n. [ʒeonan, Saxon.]

1. To gape; to oscitate; to have the mouth opened involuntarily by fumes, as in sleepiness.

The sad-ey'd justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy, yawning drone. Shakspeare, Hen. V.
In yawning, the inner parchment of the ear is extended. When a man yawneth, he cannot hear so well. Bacon.
At length shook off himself, and ask'd the dame;
And asking yawn'd, for what intent she came. Dryden.
To whom the yawning pilot fast asleep,
Me didst thou bid, to trust the treacherous deep? Dryden.

2. To open wide.

The gashes,
That bloodily did yawn upon his face. Shakspeare.
'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When churchyards yawn. Shakspeare, Hamlet.
Now will I dam up this thy yawning mouth,
For swallowing up the treasure of the realm. Shakspeare.
He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd,
Like vomit, from his yawning entrails pour'd. Sandys.
Hell at last
Yawning receiv'd them whole, and on them clos'd. Milton, P. L.
The sword pierc'd his tender sides;
Down fell the beauteous youth; the yawning wound
Gush'd out a purple stream. Dryden.
High she rear'd her arm, and with her sceptre struck
The yawning cliff: from its disparted height
Adown the mount the gushing torrent ran. Prior.

3. To express desire by yawning.

The chiefest thing at which lay-reformers yawn, is, that the clergy may, through conformity in condition, be poor as the apostles were. In which one circumstance, if they imagine so great perfection, they must think that church which hath such store of mendicant friars, a church in that respect most happy. Hooker.

YAWN. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Oscitation.

Thee, Paridel, she mark'd thee, there
Stretch'd on the rack of a too easy chair;
And heard thy everlasting yawn confess
The pains and penalties of idleness. Pope.

2. Gape; hiatus.

Hence to the borders of the marsh they go,
That mingles with the baleful streams below;
And sometimes with a mighty yawn, 'tis said,
Opens a dismal passage to the dead,
Who, pale with fear, the rending earth survey,
And startle at the sudden flash of day. Addison.

YA'WNING. adj. [from yawn.] Sleepy; slumbering.

Ere to black Hecat's summons
The sharp-born beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

YCLA'D. part. for clad. Clothed.

Her sight did ravish, but her grace in speech,
Her words yclad with wisdom's majesty,
Make me from wond'ring fall to weeping joys. Shakspeare.

YCLE'PED. [The participle passive of clepe, to call; clepan, Saxon; with the increasing particle y, which was used in the old English in the preterites and participles, from the Saxon ʒe.] Called; termed; named.

But come, thou goddess, fair and free,
In heaven yclep'd Euphrosine,
And by men, heart-easing mirth. Milton, L'All.

YDRA'D.† part. pass. of to dread.

Yet nothing did he dread, but ever was ydrad. Spenser, F. Q.

YE. The nominative plural of thou.

Ye are they which justify yourselves. St. Luke, xvi. 15.

YEA. adv. [ea, or ʒea, Saxon; ja, Danish, German, and Dutch.]

1. Yes. A particle of affirmation; meaning, it is so, or is it so?

Yea, hath God said, ye shall not eat of every tree in the garden. Gen. iii. 1.
Let your conversation be yea, yea; nay, nay. St. Matth. v.
Why do disputes in wrangling spend the day?
Whilst one says only yea, and t'other nay. Denham.

2. A particle by which the sense is intended or enforced: not only so, but more than so.

I am weary; yea, my memory is tir'd. Shakspeare.
A rascally, yea, forsooth, knave, to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security. Shakspeare.
From these Philippinæ are brought costly spices, yea, and gold too. Abbot, Descr. of the World.
All the promises of God are yea, and amen; that is, are verified, which is the importance of yea, and confirmed, which is meant by amen, into an immutability. Hammond.
They durst abide
Jehovah thundering out of Sion, thron'd
Between the cherubim; yea, often plac'd
Within his sanctuary itself their shrines. Milton.
Notwithstanding this great proximity of man to himself; yea, and notwithstanding the observations made in all ages we still remain ignorant of many things concerning ourselves. Hale.

To YEAD, or YEDE. v. n. preterite yode. [This word seems to have been corruptly formed from ʒeoð, the Saxon preterite of ʒan.] To go; to march. Obsolete.

They wander at will, and stay at pleasure,
And to their folds yeade at their own leisure. Spenser.
Then bad the knight this lady yede aloof,
And to an hill herself withdraw aside,
From whence she might behold that battle's proof,
And eke be safe from danger far descry'd. Spenser.
Yet for she yode thereat half aghast,
And Kiddy the door sparred after her fast. Spenser.
That same mighty man of God,
That bloud red billows like a walled front,
On either side disparted with his rod,
Till that his army dry-foot through them yod. Spenser.

To YEAN. v. n. [eanian, Saxon.] To bring young. Used of sheep.

> This I scarcely drag along,

> All the yeanlings which were streak'd and pied,
> Should fall as Jacob's hire. Shakspeare.

YEAR. n. s. [ȝeap, Sax.]

1. If one by the word year mean twelve months of thirty days each, i. e. three hundred and sixty days; another intend a solar year of three hundred sixty-five days; and a third mean a lunar year, or twelve lunar months, i. e. three hundred fifty-four days, there will be a great variation and error in their account of things, unless they are well apprized of each other's meaning. Watts, Logick.

> See the minutes, how they run:
> How many makes the hour full compleat,
> How many hours bring about the day,
> How many days will finish up the year,
> How many years a mortal man may live. Shakspeare.
> With the year
> Seasons return, but not to me returns
> Day, or the sweet approach of even or morn. Milton, P. L.

Though we suppose but the addition of one man for every thousand years, yet long before this time there should have been a greater number than there could be sands in the earth. Wilkins.

The doctor upon occasion calculating his expences on himself, found them to be not above five pound in the year. Fell.

Oviparous creatures have eggs enough at first conceived in them to serve them for many years laying, allowing such a proportion for every year, as will serve for one or two incubations. Ray on the Creation.

He accepted a curacy of thirty pounds a year. Swift.

2. It is often used plurally, without a plural termination.

> Damon and Pith. sign. D. i.

YE'ARNING.* n. s. [from yearn.] Act or state of being moved with pity or tenderness.

At beholding the miseries of others, they find such yearnings in their bowels, and such sensible commotions raised in their breasts, as they can by no means satisfy. Calamy.

YEAST. See YEST.

YELK. n. s. [from ȝealepe, yellow, Sax.] The yellow part of the egg. It is commonly pronounced, and often written yolk.

The yolk of the egg conduceth little to the generation of the bird, but only to the nourishment of the same: for if a chicken be opened, when it is new hatched, you shall find much of the yolk remaining. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

That a chicken is formed out of the yelk of an egg, with some antient philosophers the people still opinion. Brown.

All the feather'd kind,
From th' included yolk, not ambient white arose. Dryden.

To YELL.† v. n. [ʒyllan, Sax. yla, Su. Goth. and Icel. ὑλάω, Greek; ululo, Lat.] To cry out with horrour and agony.

Nor the night raven, that still deadly yells;
Nor grisly vultures make us once affeared. Spenser.

Now worse than e'er he was before,
Poor Puck doth yell, poor Puck doth roar,
That wak'd queen Mab, who doubted sore
Some treason had been wrought her. Drayton, Nymphid.

Yelling monsters, that with ceaseless cry
Surround me. Milton, P. L.

Night-struck fancy dreams the yelling ghost. Thomson.

To YELL.* v. a. To utter with a yell.

Each new morn,
New widows howl, new orphans cry; new sorrows
Strike heaven on the face, that it resounds,
As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out
Like syllables of dolour. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

YELL. n. s. [from the verb.] A cry of horrour.

With like timorous accent and dire yell,
As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spread in populous cities. Shakspeare, Othello.

Hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of sounding lashes, and of dragging chains.
The Trojan stood astonish'd at their cries,
And ask'd his guide from whence those yells arise. Dryden.

Others in frantick mood
Run howling through the streets; their hideous yells
Rend the dark welkin. Philips.

YE'LLOW.† adj. [ʒealep, Saxon; gheleuwe, Dutch; giallo, Ital. Mr. H. Tooke pronounces it ʒeælʒeƀ, the past participle of ʒeælan, accendere; Serenius refers to the ancient Scyth. Scand. glea, gloa, nitere, splendere.] Being of a bright glaring colour, as gold.

He brought the green ear and the yellow sheaf. Milton, P. L.

Negligent of food,
Scarce seen, he wades among the yellow broom. Thomson.

YELLOW.* n. s. Yellow colour.

A long motley coat, guarded with yellow. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

After a lively orange, followed an intense bright and copious yellow, which was also the best of all the yellows. Newton, Opt.

John did not starve the cause; there wanted not yellowboys to fee council. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

YE'LLOWGOLDS.* n. s. A flower.

Bring too some branches forth of Daphne's hair,
And gladdest myrtle for these posts to wear,
With spikenard weav'd, and marjoram between,
And starr'd with yellow-golds, and meadow's-queen. B. Jonson, Masques.

YE'LLOWHAMMER. n. s. [cenchrymus bellonii.] A bird.

YE'LLOWISH. adj. [from yellow.] Approaching to yellow.

Although amber be commonly of a yellowish colour, yet there is found of it also black, white, brown, green, blue, and purple. Woodword, Nat. Hist.

YE'LLOWISHNESS. n. s. [from yellowish.] The quality of approaching to yellow.

Bruised madder, being drenched with the like alcalizate solution, exchanged its yellowishness for a redness. Boyle.

YE'LLOWNESS. n. s. [from yellow.]

1. The quality of being yellow.

Apples, covered in lime and ashes, were well matured, as appeared in the yellowness and sweetness. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Yellowness of the skin and eyes, and a saffron-coloured urine, are signs of an inflammatory disposition of the liver. Arbuthnot.

2. It is used in Shakspeare for jealousy.

Ford I will possess with yellowness. Shakspeare.

YE'LLOWS. n. s. A disease in horses. When the gall-pipe is stopped up, that matter which should be turned into gall is carried back into the blood, and tinctures it yellow; so that the eyes, inside of the lips, slaver, and all the parts of the horse, that are capable of shewing the colour, appear yellow. Farrier's Dict.

His horse sped with spavins, and raied with the yellows. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

To YELP.† v. n. [ʒealpan, Saxon; yaulp and yolp in in our old books.] To bark as a beagle-hound after his prey.

They like impudent dogges yolpe and barke against us. Fulke, Retentive, &c. (1580,) p. 51.

To yaulpe and bark like a dog and a fox. Barret, Alv. 1580.

A little herd of England's tim'rous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

YEO'MAN.† n. s. [Of this word the original is much doubted: the true etymology seems to be that of Junius, who derives it from geman, Frisick, a villager. Dr. Johnson. — From the Goth. guma, Sax. ʒuma, Theotisc. gomman, a man. Serenius. See also BRIDEGROOM.]

1. A man of a small estate in land; a farmer; a gentleman farmer.

Gentlemen should use their children as the honest farmers and substantial yeomen do theirs. Locke.

He that has a spaniel by his side is a yeoman of about one hundred pounds a year, an honest man: he is just qualified to kill an hare. Addison.

2. It seems to have been anciently a kind of ceremonious title given to soldiers: whence we have still yeomen of the guard.

Tall yeomen seemed they, and of great might,
And were enranged ready still for fight. Spenser.

You, good yeomen,
Whose limbs were made in England, shew us here
The mettle of your pasture. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

He instituted, for the security of his person, a band of fifty archers, under a captain, to attend him, by the name of yeomen of his guard. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Th' appointment for the ensuing night he heard;
And therefore in the cavern had prepar'd
Two brawny yeomen of his trusty guard. Dryden.

At Windsor St. John whispers me i' th' ear;
The waiters stand in ranks, the yeomen cry
Make room, as if a duke were passing by. Swift.

3. It was probably a freeholder not advanced to the rank of a gentleman.

His grandfather was Lyonel duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward, king of England:
Spring crestless yeomen from so deep a root? Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

4. It seems to have had likewise the notion of a gentleman servant.

A jolly yeoman, marshal of the hall,
Whose name was appetite, he did bestow
Both guests and meats. Spenser.

YEO'MANLY.* adj. [from yeoman.] Of or belonging to a yeoman.

It would make him melancholy to see his yeomanly father cut his neighbours' throats, to make his son a gentleman! B. Jonson, Ev. Man out of his Humour.

His [Selden's] father was a yeomanly man.
Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 530.

Yeo'manry. n. s. [from yeoman.] The collective body of yeomen.

This did amortize a great part of the lands of the kingdom unto the hold and occupation of the yeomanry, or middle people, of a condition between gentlemen and cottagers. Bacon.

To YERK.† v. a. [Of unknown etymology. Dr. Johnson. — Probably of the same as jerk; hreckia, Icel. pulsare; jarke, pes feriens. Serenius.]

1. To throw out or move with a spring.

A leaping horse is said to yerk or strike out his hind legs, when he flings and kicks with his whole hind quarters, stretching out the two hinder legs near together, and even, to their full extent.
Farrier's Dict.

Their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters. Shakspeare.

2. To lash; to strike; to beat.

But that same fool, who most increased her pains,
Was Scorne; who having in his hand a whip,
Her therewith yirks. Spenser, F. Q.

How the freshmen will skip to hear one of those lines well laughed at, that they have been so often yerked for!
Echard, Gr. of Cont. of the Cl. p. 43.

To Yerk. v. n. To move as with jerks.

How she [the ship] kicks and yerks!
Beaum. and Fl. Sea-Voyage.

Pray, Madam, are you married? — Yes. More, Fables.

2. It is a word of enforcement: even so; not only so, but more.

This were a fit speech for a general in the head of an army, when going to battle: yes, and it is no less fit speech in the head of a council, upon a deliberation of entrance into a war.
Bacon.

Yes, you despise the man to books confin'd,
Who from his study rails at human kind,
Though what he learns he speaks. Pope.

YEST. n. s. [ȝeȝt, Sax.]

1. The foam, spume, or flower of beer in fermentation; barm.

Yeast and outward means do fail,
And have no power to work on ale. Hudibras.

When drays bound high, they never cross behind,
Where bubbling yeast is blown by gusts of wind. Gay.

2. The spume on troubled water; foam; froth.

Now the ship boring the moon with her main-mast, and anon swallowed with yeast and froth, as you'd thrust a cork into a hogshead. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Yesty.† adj. [from yest. Dr. Johnson. — From the Sax. ẏṗiȝ, stormy. Mr. H. Tooke.] Frothy; spumy; foamy.

Though you untie the winds, and let them fight
Against the churches; though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

YE'STER.† adj. [ȝeȝteɲn, ȝeȝtɲan, Sax. gestern, Germ. hesternus, Lat. old Engl. hestern: "hestern-day," Holinshed, Descr. of Ireland.] Being next before the present day. It is not often used but in composition with another word, as day or night.

Love might as well be sow'd upon our sands,
As in a breast so barren:
To love an enemy, the only one
Remaining too, whom yester sun beheld
Must'ring her charms. Dryden, Don. Sebast.

Ye'sterday. n. s. [ȝeȝtɲanbæȝ, Saxon.] The day last past; the day next before to-day.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

We are but of yesterday, and know nothing, because our days upon earth are a shadow. Job, viii. 9.

You are both fluid, chang'd since yesterday;
Next day repairs but ill last day's decay;
Nor are, although the river keep the name,
Yesterday's waters, and to-day's the same. Donne.

If yesterday could be recall'd again,
Ev'n now would I conclude my happy reign. Dryden.

Yesterday was set apart as a day of publick thanksgiving for the late extraordinary successes. Addison.

Mrs. Simper sends complaint in your yesterday's Spectator.
Addison, Spect.

Naked from the womb
We yesterday came forth; and in the tomb
Naked again we must to-morrow lie:
Born to lament to labour, and to die. Prior.

Ye'sterday. adv. On the day last past.

Martius gave us yesterday a representation of the empire of the Turks, with no small vigour of words. Bacon.

Ye'sternight. n. s. The night before this night.

Ye'sternight. adv. On the night last past.

Eleven hours I've spent to write it over;
For yesternight by Catesby was it sent me.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The distribution of this conference was made by Eupolis yesternight. Bacon.

YET.† conjunct. [ȝẏt, ȝet, ȝeta, Saxon; the imperative of ȝetan, to get, to obtain. Mr. H. Tooke.] Nevertheless; notwithstanding; however.

They had a king was more than him before;
But yet a king, where they were nought the more. Daniel.

French laws forbid the female reign,
Yet love does them to slav'ry draw. Cowley.

Though such men have lived never so much upon the reserve: yet if they be observed to have a particular fondness for persons noted for any sin, it is ten to one but there was a communication in the sin, before there was so in affection. South.

The heathens would never suffer their gods to be reviled, which yet were no gods; and shall it be allowed to any man to make a mock of him that made heaven and earth?
Tillotson.

He is somewhat arrogant at his first entrance, and is too inquisitive through the whole tragedy; yet these imperfections being balanced by great virtues, they hinder not our compassion for his miseries. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Let virtuoso's in five years be writ,
Yet not one thought accuse thy toil of wit. Dryden.

Yet. adv.

1. Beside; over and above.

This furnishes us with yet one more reason, why our Saviour lays such a particular stress on acts of mercy. Atterbury.

2. Still; the state still remaining the same.

They attest facts they had heard while they were yet heathens; and had they not found reason to believe them, they would still have continued heathens, and made no mention of them in their writings. Addison.

3. Once again.

Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light,
Indulge, dread chaos and eternal night. Pope, Dunciad.

4. At this time; so soon; hitherto; with a negative before it.

Thales being asked when a man should marry, said, young men not yet, old men, not at all. Bacon.

5. At least; at all. Noting uncertainty or indetermination.

A man that would form a comparison betwixt Quintilian's declamations, if yet they be Quintilian's, and the orations of Tully, would be in danger of forfeiting his discretion. Baker.

6. It denotes continuance and extension, greater or smaller.

Shake not his hour-glass, when his hasty sand
Is ebbing to the last:
A little longer, yet a little longer,
And nature drops him down without your sin,
Like mellow fruit without a winter storm. Dryden.

Yet a few days and those which now appear,
In youth and beauty like the blooming year,
In life's swift scene shall change. Dryden.

7. Still; in a new degree.

He that takes from a thief that which the thief took from an honest man, and keeps it to himself, is the wickeder thief of the two, by how much the rapine is made yet blacker by the pretence of piety and justice. L'Estrange.

8. Even; after all. A kind of emphatical addition to a negative.

If any man neglect his duty, his fault must not be ascribed to the rule appointed, neither yet to the whole church. Whitgift.

Men may not too rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor yet the evidence against them; for the witches themselves are imaginative, and people are credulous, and ready to impute accidents and natural operations to witchcraft. Bacon.

Nor yet amidst this joy and brightest morn
Was absent, after all his mischief done,
The prince of darkness. Milton, P. R.

9. Hitherto: sometimes with as before it.

Hope beginning here, with a trembling expectation of things far removed, and as yet but only heard of, endeth with real and actual fruition of that which no tongue can express. Hooker.

Ye'ven, for given.

Wants not a fourth grace to make the dance even?
Let that room to my lady be yeven;
She shall be a grace,
To fill the fourth place,
And reign with the rest in heaven. Spenser.

YEW. n. s. [ip, Saxon; yw, Welsh. This is often written eugh; but the former orthography is at once nearer to the sound and the derivation. See Eugh.] A tree of tough wood: used for bows, and therefore planted in churchyards.

It hath amentaceous flowers, which consist of many apices, for the most part shaped like a mushroom, and are barren; but the embryoes, which are produced at remote distances on the same tree, do afterward become hollow, bell-shaped berries, which are full of juice, and include seeds somewhat like acorns, having, as it were, a little cup to each. Miller.

The shooter eugh, the broad-leav'd sycamore,
The barren plantane, and the walnut sound;
The myrrhe, that her foul sin doth still deplore,
Alder the owner of all waterish ground. Fairfax.

Slips of yew,
Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

He drew,
And almost join'd the horns of the tough yew. Dryden.

The distinguish'd yew is ever seen,
Unchang'd his branch, and permanent his green. Prior.

Ye'wen. adj. [from yew.] Made of the wood of yew.

His stiff arms to stretch with eughen bow,
And manly legs still passing to and fro. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

YEX. † n. s. [hick, hickse, Belg. ʒeoꞅunʒ, Sax. Junius.] The hiccough. See also Yux.

They do stay the excessive yex or hocket.
Holland, Tr. of Pliny, B. 27. ch. 5.

Ferdinando earl of Derby, dying of a yex.
Harrington, Suppl. to Godwin's Bishops, (1609.)

To Yex. † v. n. To have the hiccough. Huloet.

Yfe're. † adv. [ȝyꞅeꞃe, Saxon.] Together.

O goodly golden chayne, wherewith yfere
The virtues linked were in lovely wise. Spenser, F. Q.

To YIELD. v. a. [ȝelban, Saxon, to pay.]

1. To produce; to give in return for cultivation or labour.

When thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength. Gen. iv. 12.

No country for the bigness of it can be better watered, or yield fairer fruits. Heylin.

Strabo tells us the mines at Carthagena yielded the Romans per diem to the value of twenty-five thousand drachms, eight hundred and seven pounds, five shillings and ten pence. Arbuthnot.

2. To produce in general.

He makes milch kine yield blood. Shakspeare.

The wilderness yieldeth food for them. Job, xxiv. 5.

All the substances of an animal, fed even with acescent substances, yield by fire nothing but alkaline salts. Arbuthnot.

3. To afford; to exhibit.

Philoclea would needs have her glove, and not without so mighty a lour as that face could yield. Sidney.

The mind of man desireth evermore to know the truth, according to the most infallible certainty which the nature of things can yield. Hooker.

If you take the idea of white, which one parcel of snow yielded yesterday to your sight, and another idea of white from another parcel of snow you see to-day, and put them together in your mind, they run into one, and the idea of whiteness is not at all increased. Locke.

4. To give as claimed of right.

I the praise
Yield thee, so well thou hast this day purvey'd. Milton, P. L.

5. To allow; to concede.

I yield it just, said Adam, and submit. Milton, P. L.

I that have not only yielded, but challenged the undoubted truth of the proposition, can make no question of its corollaries. Hammond.

6. To permit; to grant.

Life is but air,
That yields a passage to the whistling sword,
And closes when 'tis gone. Dryden, Don Sebast.

7. To emit; to expire.

Often did I strive
To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood
Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth
To find the empty, vast, and wand'ring air.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

He gathered up his feet into the bed, and yielded up the ghost. Gen. xlix. 33.

8. To resign; to give up: sometimes with a particle, as up or over.

He not yielding over to old age his country delights, especially of hawking, was at that time, following a merlin, brought to see this injury offered unto us. Sidney.

Thus I have yielded up into your hand
The circle of my glory. Shakspeare, K. John.

She to realities yields all her shows. Milton, P. L.

'Tis the pride of man which is the spring of this evil, and an unwillingness to yield up their own opinions. Watts.

9. To surrender: sometimes with up.

The enemies sometimes offered unto the soldiers, upon the walls, great rewards, if they would yield up the city, and sometimes threatened them as fast. Knolles.

They laugh, as if to them I had quitted all,
At random yielded up to their misrule. Milton, P. L.

To Yield. v. n.

1. To give up the contest; to submit.

He yields not in his fall;
But fighting dies, and dying kills withal. Daniel.

All is not lost; immortal hate,
And courage never to submit or yield. Milton, P. L.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stopt, it suddenly yields to nature, and dies. Walton, Angler.

There he saw the fainting Grecians yield,
And here the trembling Trojans quit the field,
Pursu'd by fierce Achilles. Dryden.

2. To comply with any person, or motive power.

Considering this present age so full of tongue, and weak of brain, behold we yield to the stream thereof. Hooker.

I see a yielding in the looks of France:
Mark how they whisper. Shakspeare, K. John.

This supernatural soliciting, if ill,
Why hath it given me earnest of success?
If good, why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth upfix my hair? Shakspeare, K. Lear.

With her much fair speech she caused him to yield. Prov. vii. 21.

The Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldst bring down Paul; but do not thou yield unto them. Acts, xxiii. 21.

They shew the world that they are not of a yielding temper, which will be wronged or baffled. Kettlewell.

3. To comply with things required or enforced.

There could be no secure peace, except the Lacedæmonians yielded to those things, which being granted, it would be no longer in their power to hurt the Athenians. Bacon.

If much converse
Thee satiate, to short absence I could yield. Milton, P. L.

4. To concede; to admit; to allow; not to deny.

If we yield that there is a God, and that this God is almighty and just, it cannot be avoided but that, after this life ended, he administers justice unto men. Hakewill.

5. To give place as inferiour in excellence or any other quality.

The fight of Achilles and Cygnus, and the fray betwixt the Lapithæ and Centaurs, yield to no other part of this poet. Dryden.

Tell me in what more happy fields
The thistle springs, to which the lily yields? Pope.

YIE'LDABLENESS.* n. s. [from yield.] Disposition to concede or comply with.

The fourth disposition for peace [is] a yieldableness upon sight of clearer truths. Bp. Hall, Works, iii. 553.

YIE'LDANCE.* n. s. [from yield.]

1. Act of producing.

How should the corn, wine, oil, be had without the yieldance of the earth? Bp. Hall, Seasonable Serm. p. 28.

2. Act of complying with; concession.

I might draw him to a willing yieldance of that parcel of my due maintenance. Bp. Hall, Specialties of his Life.

It must not be by any considerable yieldance or change on both sides, but by a reformation on theirs. Trapp, Popery Truly Stated, P. iii.

YIE'LDER. n. s. [from yield.] One who yields.

Briars and thorns at their apparel snatch,
Some sleeves, some hats; from yielders all things catch. Shakspeare.

Some guard these traitors to the block of death,
Treason's true bed and yielder up of breath. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

YIE'LDING.* n. s. [from yield.] Act of giving up; submission.

Immaculate and spotless is my mind;
That was not forc'd; that never was inclin'd
To accessary yieldings. Shakspeare, Rape of Lucr.

YIE'LDINGLY.* adv. [from yielding.] With compliance.

Maids that know themselves belov'd, and yieldingly resist. Warner, Albion's England.

YIE'LDINGNESS.* n. s. [from yielding.]

1. Disposition to give up any point.

That yieldingness, whatever foundations it might lay to the disadvantage of posterity, was a specific to preserve us in peace for his own time. Ld. Halifax.

2. Quality of yielding.

The shallowness of the socket at the shoulder, and the yieldingness of the cartilaginous substance with which its edge is set round, are excellently adapted for the allowance of a free motion and a wide range. Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 8.

YOKE. n. s. [ȝeoc, Saxon; jock, Dutch; jugum, Latin; joug, French.]

1. The bandage placed on the neck of draught oxen.

Bring a red heifer, wherein is no blemish, and upon which never came yoke. Numb. xix. 2.

A yearling bullock to thy name shall smoke,
Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke. Pope.

2. A mark of servitude; slavery.

Our country sinks beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

In bands of iron fetter'd you shall be;
An easier yoke than what you put on me. Dryden, Aurengz.

3. A chain; a link; a bond.

This yoke of marriage from us both remove,
Where two are bound to draw, though neither love. Dryden.

4. A couple; two; a pair. It is used in the plural with the singular termination.

Those that accuse him in his intent towards our wives, are a yoke of his discarded men. Shakspeare.

His lands a hundred yoke of oxen till'd. Dryden, Æn.

A yoke of mules outgoes a yoke of oxen, when set to work at the same time; for mules are swifter. Broome.

To YOKE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind by a yoke to a carriage.

This Stetes promised to do, if he alone would yoke together two brazen-hoofed bulls, and, plowing the ground, sow dragons' teeth. L'Estrange.

Four milk-white bulls, the Thracian use of old,
Were yok'd to draw his car of burnish'd gold. Dryden.

2. To join or couple with another.

My name
Be yok'd with his that did betray the best. Shakspeare.

Cassius, you are yoked with a lamb
That carries anger as the flint bears fire. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

Seek not in Latian bands to yoke
Our fair Lavinia. Dryden, Æn.

3. To enslave; to subdue.

These are the arms
With which he yoketh your rebellious necks,
Razeth your cities. Shakspeare.

4. To restrain; to confine.

Men marry not; but chuse rather a libertine single life, than to be yoked in marriage. Bacon.

Xerxes, the liberty of Greece to yoke,
Came to the sea. Milton, P. L.

The words and promises, that yoke
The conqueror, are quickly broke. Hudibras.

To YOKE.* v. n. To be joined with another.

An improper and ill-yoking couple. Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Div. i. 14.

YOKE-ELM. n. s. [carpinus, Latin.] A tree. Ainsworth.

YO'KEFELLOW. } YO'KEMATE. } n. s. [yoke and fellow, or mate.]

1. Companion in labour.

Yokefellows in arms,
Let us to France. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

2. Mate; fellow; commonly partner in marriage.

You cannot think me fit
To be th' yokefellow of your wit,
Nor take one of so mean deserts
To be the partner of your parts. Hudibras.

Before Toulon thy yokemate lies,
Where all the live-long night he sighs. Stepney.

Those who have most distinguished themselves by railing at the sex, very often chuse one of the most worthless for a companion and yokefellow. Addison, Spect.

YOLD, for yielded. Obsolete.* Spenser.

YOLK. n. s. [See YELK.] The yellow part of an egg.

Nature hath provided a large yolk in every egg, a great part whereof remaineth after the chicken is hatched; and, by a channel made on purpose, serves instead of milk to nourish the chick for a considerable time. Ray on the Creation.

To YOLP.* See To YELP.

YON.
YOND. } adj. [ȝeonð, Saxon.] Being at a distance within view.
YO'NDER.

Madam, yond young fellow swears he will speak with you. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Good mother, do not marry me to yon fool. Shakspeare.

Would you not laugh to meet a great counsellor of state in a flat cap, his gloves under his girdle, and yond haberdasher in a velvet gown furred with sables? B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Tigranes, being encamped upon a hill with four hundred thousand men, discovered the army of the Romans, being not above fourteen thousand, marching towards him: he made himself merry with it, and said, yonder men are too many for an ambassage, and too few for a fight. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

For proof look up,
And read thy lot in yon celestial sign. Milton, P. L.

Yon flowery arbors, yonder allies green. Milton, P. L.

Let other swains attend the rural care,
But nigh yon mountain let me tune my lays. Pope.

Then hear me, gracious Heav'n, and grant my pray'r,
Make yonder man the fav'rite of thy care:
Nourish the plant with thy celestial dew,
Like manna let it fall, and still be new. Harte.

If I were to fall down yonder precipice and break my neck, I should be no more a man of this world. Beattie.

YON.
YOND. } adv. At a distance within view. It is used when we direct the eye from another thing to the object.
YO'NDER.

The fringed curtains of thine eyes advance,
And say what thou see'st yond. Shakspeare, Tempest.

First, and chiefest, with thee bring
Him that yon soars on golden wing,
Guiding the fiery-wheeled throne,
The cherub, Contemplation. Milton, Il Pens.

Yonder are two apple-women scolding. Arbuthnot and Pope.

YOND. adj. [I know not whence derived.] Mad; furious: perhaps transported with rage; under alienation of mind; in which sense it concurs with the rest.

Then like a lion, which hath long time sought
His robbed whelps, and at the last them found
Amongst the shepherd swains, then waxeth wood and yond:
So fierce he laid about him. Spenser.

Nor those three brethren, Lombards, fierce and yond. Fairfax.

YORE, or of Yore. adv. [ȝeoȝaɲa, Saxon.]

1. Long.

Witness the burning altars, which he swore,
And, guilty, heavens of his bold perjury;
Which though he hath polluted oft and yore,
Yet I to them for judgment just do fly. Spenser.

2. Of old time; long ago: with of before it.

And seated here a see, his bishoprick of yore,
Upon the farthest point of this unfruitful shore. Drayton.

Thee bright-eye'd Vesta long of yore
To solitary Saturn bore. Milton, Il Pens.

There liv'd, as authors tell, in days of yore,
A widow somewhat old, and very poor. Dryden.

In times of yore an ancient baron liv'd;
Great gifts bestow'd, and great respect receiv'd. Prior.

The dev'l was piqu'd such saintship to behold,
And long'd to tempt him, like good Job of old;
But Satan now is wiser than of yore,
And tempts by making rich, not making poor. Pope.

YOU. pron. [eop, ıuh, Saxon; of ȝe, ye.]

1. The oblique case of ye.

Ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God, which is given me to you ward. Eph. iii. 2.

I thought to show you
How easy 'twas to die, by my example,
And hansel fate before you. Dryden, Cleomenes.

2. It is used in the nominative in common language, when the address is to persons; and though first introduced by corruption, is now established. In the following lines you and ye are used ungrammatically in the places of each other; but even this use is customary:

What gain you by forbidding it to teaze ye?
It now can neither trouble ye, nor please ye. Dryden.

3. It is the ceremonial word for the second person singular, and is always used, except in solemn language.

In vain you tell your parting lover,
You wish fair winds may waft him over. Prior.

But, Madam, if the fates withstand, and you
Are destin'd Hymen's willing victim too. Pope.

4. It is used indefinitively, as the French on; any one; whosoever.

We passed by what was one of those rivers of burning matter: this looks, at a distance, like a new-plowed land; but as you come near it, you see nothing but a long heap of heavy disjointed clods. Addison on Italy.

5. You is used in the subsequent members of a sentence, as distinguished from ye.

Stand forth, ye champions, who the gauntlet wield,
Or you the swiftest racers of the field. Pope.

YOUNG.† adj. [ıonȝ, ẏeonȝ, Saxon; jong, Dutch; ung, Su. Goth. and Icel. jugga, (i. e. junga,) M. Goth.]

1. Being in the first part of life; not old: used of animal life.

Guests should be interlarded, after the Persian custom, by ages young and old. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims. Shakspeare.

I firmly am resolv'd
Not to bestow my youngest daughter,
Before I have a husband for the elder. Shakspeare.

Thou old and true Menenius,
Thy tears are salter than a younger man's,
And venomous to thine eyes. Shakspeare, Coriol.

He ordain'd a lady for his prize,
Generally praiseful, fair and young, and skill'd in housewiferies. Chapman.

In timorous deer he hansels his young paws,
And leaves the rugged bear for firmer claws. Cowley.

Nor need'st thou by thy daughter to be told,
Though now thy sprity blood with age be cold,
Thou hast been young. Dryden.

When we say a man is young, we mean that his age is yet but a small part of that which usually men attain to: and when we denominate him old, we mean that his duration is run out almost to the end of that which men do not usually exceed. Locke.

It will be but an ill example to prove, that dominion, by God's ordination, belonged to the eldest son; because Jacob the youngest here had it. Locke.

From earth they rear him struggling now with death,
And Nestor's youngest stops the vents of breath. Pope.

2. Ignorant; weak.

Come, elder brother, thou art too young in this. Shakspeare.

3. It is sometimes applied to vegetable life.

There be trees that bear best when they begin to be old, as almonds; the cause is, for that all trees that bear must have an oily fruit; and young trees have a more watry juice, and less concocted. Bacon.

YOUNG. n. s. The offspring of animals collectively.

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had its head bit off by its young. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

So many days my ewes have been with young;
So many weeks ere the poor fools will yean. Shakspeare.

The eggs disclos'd their callow young. Milton.

The reason why birds are oviparous, and lay eggs, but do not bring forth their young alive, is because there might be more plenty. More against Atheism.

Not so her young; for their unequal line
Was heroes make, half human, half divine;

Their earthly mold obnoxious was to fate,
Th' immortal part assum'd immortal state. Dryden.

Those insects, for whose young nature hath not made provision of sufficient sustenance, do themselves gather and lay up in store for them. Ray on the Creation.

YOU'NGISH. adj. [from young.] Somewhat young.

She let her second room to a very genteel youngish man. Tatler.

YOU'NGLING. n. s. [from young; ẏeonᵹlınᵹ, Saxon.] Any creature in the first part of life.

More dear unto their God, than younglings to their dam. Spenser, F. Q.

Youngling, thou canst not love so dear as I. —
— Grey beard, thy love doth freeze. Shakspeare.

When we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer, they suckle their younglings with milk. Brown.

Encourag'd thus, she brought her younglings nigh. Dryden.

The stately beast the two Tyrrheidæ bred,
Snatch'd from his dam, and the tame youngling fed. Dryden.

YOU'NGLY.* adj. [from young.] Youthful.

Beardless, with a yongly face. Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

Look what ladies and gentlewomen be most fruitful, and have most children, if they look not for their age most youngly, best coloured, and be clearest from diseases.
Sir T. Smith, Life, &c. App. p. 42.

YOU'NGLY. adv. [from young.]

1. Early in life.

Say we read lectures to you,
How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continu'd, and what stock he springs of. Shakspeare.

2. Ignorantly; weakly.

YOU'NGSTER. } n. s. [from young.] A young person; in contempt.
YOU'NKER. }

What, will you make a younker of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, but I shall so have my pocket pick'd?
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewel of the glorious sun:
How well resembles it the prime of youth,
Trimm'd like a yonker prancing to his love. Shakspeare.

While Ulysses slept there; and close by
The other yonkers, he abroad would ly. Chapman.

Fame tells, by age fame reverend grown,
That Phœbus gave his chariot to his son;
And whilst the youngster from the path declines,
Admiring the strange beauty of the signs,
Proud of his charge, he drove the fiery horse,
And would outdo his father in his course. Creech.

The youngster, who at nine and three
Drinks with his sisters milk and tea,
From breakfast reads till twelve o'clock
Burnet and Heylin, Hobbes and Locke. Prior.

YOUNGTH. n. s. [from young.] Youth. Obsolete.

The mournful muse in mirth now list ne mask,
As she was wont in youngth and summer days. Spenser.

YOUR. pronoun. [eoper, Saxon.]

1. Belonging to you. It is used properly when we speak to more than one, and ceremoniously and customarily when to only one.

Either your unparagoned mistress is dead, or she's outprized by a trifle. Shakspeare.

Impute your danger to our ignorance;
The bravest men are subject most to chance. Dryden.

Ye dauntless Dardans hear,
Think on the strength which once your fathers bore. Pope.

2. Your is used in an indeterminate sense.

Every true man's apparel fits your thief: if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough. If it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough; so every true man's apparel fits your thief. Shakspeare.

There is a great affinity between coins and poetry, and your medallist and critic are much nearer related than the world imagine. Addison on Medals.

A disagreement between these seldom happens, but among your antiquaries and schoolmen. Felton on the Classicks.

3. Yours is used when the substantive goes before or is understood; as, this is your book, this book is yours.

Pray for this man and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

That done, our day of marriage shall be yours,
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness. Shakspeare.

This kiss, if it durst speak,
Would stretch thy spirits up into the air:
Conceive and fare thee well. —
— Yours in the ranks of death. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

He is forsworn, if e'er those eyes of yours
Behold another day break in the east. Shakspeare.

While the sword this monarchy secures,
'Tis manag'd by an abler hand than yours. Dryden.

My wealth, my city and myself are yours. Dryden.

It is my employment to revive the old of past ages to the present, as it is yours to transmit the young of the present to the future. Pope.

YOURSE'LF. n. s. [your and self.]

1. You, even you; ye, not others.

If it stand as you yourself still do,
Within the eye of honour; be assur'd,
My purse, my person, my extremest means,
Lie all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakspeare.

O heav'ns!
If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
Allow obedience, if yourselves are old,
Make it your cause. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. In the oblique cases it has the sense of reciprocation, or reference to the same subject mentioned before: as, you love only yourself: you have betrayed yourselves by your rashness.

Whenever you are more intent upon adorning your persons, than upon perfecting of your souls, you are much more beside yourselves, than he that had rather have a laced coat than a healthful body. Law.

3. It is sometimes reciprocal in the nominative.

Be but yourselves. Pope.

YOUTH. n. s. [ẏeoᵹuð, Saxon.]

1. The part of life succeeding to childhood and adolescence; the time from fourteen to twenty-eight.

But could youth last, and love still breed,
Had joys no date, and age no need;
Then these delights my mind might move,
To live with thee, and be thy love. Ralegh.

His starry helm unbuckled show'd him prime
In manhood, where youth ended. Milton, P. L.

The solidity, quantity, and strength of the aliment, is to be proportioned to the labour or quantity of muscular motion, which in youth is greater than any other age. Arbuthnot.

2. A young man.

Siward's son,
And many unrough youths even now,
Protest their first of manhood. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

If this were seen,
The happiest youth viewing his progress through,
What perils past, what crosses to ensue,
Would shut the book and sit him down and die. Shakspeare.

O'er the lofty gate his art emboss'd
Androgeos' death, and off'rings to his ghost;
Sev'n youths from Athens yearly sent, to meet
The fate appointed by revengeful Crete. Dryden.

The pious chief
A hundred youths from all his train elects,
And to the Latian court their course directs. Dryden.

3. Young men. Collectively.

As it is fit to read the best authors to youth first, so let them be of the openest and clearest; as Livy before Sallust, Sidney before Donne. B. Jonson.

About him exercis'd heroick games
The unarmed youth of heaven. Milton, P. L.

The graces put not more exactly on
Th' attire of Venus, when the ball she won,

Than that young beauty by thy care is drest,
When all your youth prefers her to the rest. Waller.

YOU'THFUL. adj. [youth and full.]

1. Young.

Our army is dispers'd already:
Like youthful steers unyok'd they took their course,
East, west, north, south. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

There, in a heap of slain, among the rest
Two youthful knights they found beneath a load opprest
Of slaughter'd foes. Dryden.

2. Suitable to the first part of life.

Here be all the pleasures
That fancy can beget on youthful thoughts,
When the fresh blood grows lively, and returns
Brisk as the April buds in primrose season. Milton, Comus.

In his years were seen
A youthful vigour and autumnal green. Dryden.

The nymph surveys him, and beholds the grace
Of charming features, and a youthful face. Pope.

3. Vigorous as in youth.

How is a good Christian animated by a stedfast belief of an everlasting enjoyment of perfect felicity, such as, after millions of millions of ages is still youthful and flourishing, and inviting as at the first? no wrinkles in the face, no grey hairs on the head of eternity. Bentley.

YOU'THFULLY. adv. [from youthful.] In a youthful manner.

YOU'THLY. adj. [from youth.] Young; early in life. Obsolete.

True be thy words, and worthy of thy praise,
That warlike feats dost highly glorify,
Therein have I spent all my youthly days,
And many battles fought and many frays. Spenser.

YOU'THY. adj. [from youth.] Young; youthful. A bad word.

The scribbler had not genius to turn my age, as indeed I am an old maid, into raillery, for affecting a youthier turn than is consistent with my time of day. Spectator.

YPI'GHT. part. [y and pight, from pitch.] Fixed.

That same wicked wight
His dwelling has low in an hollow cave,
Far underneath a craggy clift ypight,
Dark, doleful, dreary, like a greedy grave. Spenser.

To YUCK.† v. n. [jeucken, Dutch.] To itch. Grose calls it a Lincolnshire word.

YULE.† n. s. [jul, Su. Goth. jule, Dan. jol, Icel. ȝehul, ȝeola, ȝeol, Saxon. Dr. Jamieson agrees with Mr. Pinkerton in tracing it to one of the three great religious festivals in the year, which the ancient Goths observed; namely Yule, or Jul, celebrated at the time of the winter-solstice, in honour of the sun. See Dr. Jamieson, in V. YULE. Hammond refers it to the Lat. jubilum. The Welsh wyl, or gwyl, it may be added, is a holyday; and the Cimbr. ol signifies a feast.] A word adopted, and formerly much in use, for the times of Christmas and Lammas.

This is the original yule — the other the yule of August determinately. Hammond, Works, i. 660.

Masks, singing, dancing, yule-games.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 270.

The misletoe ceremonial of the yule festival continued from the time of the Druids. Stukeley, Palæogr. Sacr. p. 10.

YUX.† n. s. [ȝeox, Saxon: sometimes pronounced yex, and yox, or yokes. See YEX.] The hiccough.

Z.

Z, Is found in the Saxon alphabets, set down by Grammarians, but is read in no word originally Teutonick: its sound is uniformly that of an hard S. No word of English original begins with Z.

ZA'FFAR. }
ZA'FFIR. } n. s.

Powder the calx of cobalt fine, and mix it with three times its weight of powdered flints, this being wetted with common water, concretes into a mass called zaffre, which from its hardness has been mistaken for a native mineral. Hill.

Cobalt being sublimed, the flowers are of a blue colour; these, German mineralists call zaffir. Woodward.

The artificers in glass tinge their glass blue with that dark mineral zaphra. Boyle on Colours.

ZA'NY.† n. s. [probably of zane, the contraction of Giovanni: from sanna, a scoff, according to Skinner. Dr. Johnson.—I may add the barbarous Greek τζαννὸς, a fool; zanni, Ital. sannio, Latin. Mr. Horne Tooke has observed, that zany and nizy are both from the same Italian word, viz. sanese; zany, from the former, and nizy from the latter part of the word; and that Sanese, or a native of Sienna in Italy, was equivalent to a fool, may be learned from many Italian books, as well as by conversation with the Florentines. He accordingly refers to some Italian comedies in proof. Poggius, I may add, mentions a native of Sienna thus: "Pasquinus Senensis, vir dicax ac jocosus." Facet. p. 468.] One employed to raise laughter by his gestures, actions, and speeches; a merry Andrew; a buffoon.

Some carrytale, some pleaseman, some slight zany,
Some mumblenews, some trencher knight, some Dick,
Told our intents before. Shakspeare.

Then write that I may follow, and so be
Thy echo, thy debtor, thy foil, thy zany,
I shall be thought, if mine like thine I shape,
All the world's lion, though I be thy ape. Donne.

Oh, great restorer of the good old stage,
Preacher at once, and zany of thy age. Pope, Dunciad.

To ZA'NY.* v. a. [from the noun.] To mimick.

All excellence
In other madams does but zany hers.
Beaum. and Fl. Qu. of Corinth.

Laughs them to scorn, as men doth busy apes
When they will zany men. Marston, Ant. Revenge.

ZA'RNICH. n. s. A substance in which orpiment is found; it approaches to the nature of orpiment, but without its lustre and foliated texture. The common kinds of zarnich are green and yellow.
Hill, Mat. Med.

ZEA.* n. s. A kind of corn. Chambers.

ZEAL. n. s. [ζῆλος, zelus, Latin.] Passionate ardour for any person or cause.

In this present age, wherein zeal hath drowned charity and skill; meekness will not now suffer any man to marvel, whatsoever he shall hear reproved by whomsoever. Hooker.

If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you: but it is no matter, this poor show doth better; this doth infer the zeal I had to see him. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

O Cromwell, Cromwell!
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shakspeare.

The bare fervour and zeal is taken in commutation for much other piety, by many the most eager contenders.
Hammond.

Among the seraphim
Abdiel, than whom none with more zeal ador'd
The Deity, and divine commands obey'd,
Stood up, and in a flame of zeal severe,
The current of his fury thus oppos'd. Milton, P. L.

Had zeal anciently armed itself against sovereignty, we had never heard of a calendar of saints. Holyday.

We must look our prayers be with zeal and earnestness: it is not enough that we so far attend them, as barely to know what it is we say, but we must put forth all the affection and devotion of our souls. Wh. Duty of Man.

Zeal, the blind conductor of the will. Dryden.

She, with such a zeal the cause embrac'd,
As women, where they will, are all in haste;
The father, mother, and the kin beside,
Were overborne by the fury of the tide. Dryden.

The princes applaud with a furious joy,
And the king seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy. Dryden.

Seriousness and zeal in religion is natural to the English.
Tillotson, Serm.

Good men often blemish the reputation of their piety by over-acting some things in their religion; by an indiscreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned. Tillotson.

True zeal seems not to be any one single affection of the soul; but rather a strong mixture of many holy affections; rather a gracious constitution of the whole mind, than any one particular grace, swaying a devout heart, and filling it with all pious intentions; all not only uncounterfeit, but most fervent. Sprat, Serm.

When the sins of a nation have provoked God to forsake it, he suffers those to concur in the most pernicious counsels for enslaving conscience, who pretend to the greatest zeal for the liberty of it. Stillingfleet.

This rebellion has discovered to his majesty, who have espoused his interests with zeal or indifference. Addison, Freeholder.

A scorn of flattery and a zeal for truth. Pope.

There is nothing noble in a clergyman but burning zeal for the salvation of souls; nor any thing poor in his profession, but idleness and worldly spirit. Law.

To Zeal.* v. n. To entertain zeal. Not in use.

Stiff followers, such as zeal marvellously for those whom they have chosen for their masters. Bacon on the Controv. of the Ch. of Eng.

Zea'led.* adj. Filled with zeal. Not in use.

This good king's judgement was over-zealed. Fuller, Holy War, p. 214.

Zea'l-less.* adj. [zeal and less.] Wanting zeal.

Look on your indevotion, that heartless zealless behaviour in this very house of God. Hammond, Works, iv. 514.

Zea'lot. n. s. [zeloteur, French; ζηλωτὴς, Gr.] One passionately ardent in any cause. Generally used in dispraise.

But now, whereas these zealots complain of us for partaking with the Roman church, in things lawful and good; they themselves comply with the same in articles and actions, which are of no good quality. White.

The fury of zealots, intestine bitterness and division were the greatest occasion of the destruction of Jerusalem. King Charles.

Are not those men too often the greatest zealots who are most notoriously ignorant? true zeal should always begin with true knowledge, and thence proceed to an unwearied passion, for what it once knows to be worthy of such passion. Sprat.

No wonder that so many of these deluded zealots have been engaged in a cause which they at first abhorred, and have wished or acted for the success of an enterprize, that might have ended in the extirpation of the protestant religion. Addison.

Zea'lotry.* n. s. [from zealot.] Behaviour of a zealot.

No casuist is sufficient to enumerate or resolve the many intricate niceties, and endless scruples of conscience, which some men's and women's more plebeian zelotry makes; as about ladies' cheeks and faces, &c. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 63.

Zea'lous. adj. [from zeal.] Ardently passionate in any cause.

Our hearts are right with God, and our intentions pious, if we act our temporal affairs with a desire no greater than our necessity, and in actions of religion we be zealous, active, and operative, so far as prudence will permit. Bp. Taylor.

This day, at height of noon, came to my sphere,
A spirit, zealous, as he seem'd, to know
More of the Almighty's works. Milton, P. L.

We should be not only devout towards God, but zealous towards men; endeavouring by all prudent means to recover them out of those snares of the devil, whereby they are taken captive. Dec. of Chr. Piety.

It is not at all good to be zealous against any person, but only against their crimes. It is better to be zealous for things than for persons: but then it should be only for good things; a rule that does certainly exclude all manner of zeal for ill things, all manner of zeal for little things. Sprat, Serm.

Being instructed only in the general, and zealous in the main design; and as finite beings not admitted into the secrets of government, the last resorts of providence, or capable of discovering the final purposes of God, they must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends in which alone they can oppose each other. Dryden.

Being thus saved himself, he may be zealous in the salvation of souls. Law.

Zea'lously. adv. [from zealous.] With passionate ardour.

Thy care is fixt, and zealously attends,
To fill thy odorous lamp with deeds of light,
And hope that reaps not shame. Milton, Sonnet.

To enter into a party as into an order of friars, with so resigned an obedience to superiors, is very unsuitable with the civil and religious liberties we so zealously assert. Swift.

Zea'lousness. n. s. [from zealous.] The quality of being zealous.

ZEBRA.* n. s. An Indian ass, naturally striped. Mason.

The chiefs are generally clad in skins of lions, tygers, or zebras. Hawkesworth, Voyages.

Ze'chin. n. s. [from Zecha, a place in Venice where the mint is settled for coinage.] A gold coin worth about nine shillings sterling.

Zed. n. s. The name of the letter z.

Thou whoreson zed, thou unnecessary letter. Shakspeare.

Ze'doary.† n. s. [zedoaire, French.] A spicy plant, somewhat like ginger in its leaves, but of a sweet scent.

If some infrequent passenger crossed our streets, it was not without his medicated posie at his nose, and his zedoary or angelica in his mouth. Bp. Hall, Thanksgiv. Serm. (1625.)

Ze'nith. n. s. [Arabick.] The point over head opposite to the nadir.

Fond men! if we believe that men do live
Under the zenith of both frozen poles,
Though none come thence, advertisement to give,
Why bear we not the like faith of our souls? Davies.

These seasons are designed by the motions of the sun, when that approaches nearest our zenith, or vertical point, we call it Summer. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Ze'phyr. } n. s. [zephyrus, Lat.] The west wind;
Ze'phyrus. } and poetically any calm soft wind.

They are as gentle
As zephyrs blowing below the violet. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Zephyr, you shall see a youth with a merry countenance, holding in his hand a swan with wings displayed, as about to sing. Peacham on Drawing.

Forth rush the levant and the ponent winds,

Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes. Milton, P. L.

ZEST. n. s.

1. The peel of an orange squeezed into wine.
2. A relish; a taste added.

Almighty Vanity! to thee they owe
Their zest of pleasure, and their balm of woe. Young.

To Zest. v. a. To heighten by an additional relish.

Zete'tick. adj. [from ζητέω.] Proceeding by enquiry.

Zeu'gma. n. s. [from ζεῦγμα.] A figure in Grammar, when a verb agreeing with divers nouns, or an adjective with divers substantives, is referred to one expressly, and to the other by supplement; as, lust overcame shame, boldness fear, and madness reason.

ZIG-ZAG.* n. s. A line with sharp and quick turns. Mason.

Like running lead,
That slipt through cracks and zig-zags of the head. Pope.

A winding road, which forms thirteen zig-zags. Twiss, Trav. vol. i. p. 67.

Zig-zag.* adj. Having sharp and quick turns.

He seems to have been contemplating some zig-zag shrubberies. Graves, Recoll. of Shenstone, p. 53.

To Zig-zag.* v. a. To form into sharp and quick turns.

The middle aile has on each side four Norman round arches zig-zagged, surmounted with as many round-headed small windows. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 4.

ZINC.* n. s. A semi-metal of a brilliant white colour approaching to blue. Mason.

Zinc has been found native, though rarely, in the form of the thin and flexible filaments, of a grey colour, which were easily inflamed, when applied to a fire. Cronstadt English'd.

ZO'CLE. n. s. [In architecture.] A small sort of stand or pedestal, being a low square piece or member, serving to support a busto, statue, or the like, that needs to be raised; also a low square member serving to support a column, instead of a pedestal, base, or plinth. Dict.

ZODI'ACAL.* adj. [from zodiack.] Relating to the zodiack.

The northern zodiacal signs. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 26.
A philosophic explanation of the zodiacal system.
Warton, Hist. E. P. iii. 451.

ZO'DIACK. n. s. [zodiaque, French; ζωδιακὸς, ἐκ τῶν ζώων, the living creatures, the figures of which are painted on it in globes.]

1. The track of the sun through the twelve signs; a great circle of the sphere, containing the twelve signs.

The golden sun salutes the morn,
And having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiack in his glist'ring coach. Shakspeare.
Years he number'd scarce thirteen,
When fates turn'd cruel;
Yet three fill'd zodiacks had he been
The stage's jewel. B. Jonson.

It exceeds even their absurdity to suppose the zodiack and planets to be efficient of, and antecedent to themselves, or to exert any influences before they were in being. Bentley.

Here in a shrine that cast a dazzling light,
Sat fixt in thought the mighty Stagyrite;
His sacred head a radiant zodiack crown'd,
And various animals his sides surround. Pope.

2. It is used by Milton for a girdle.

By his side,
As in a glistering zodiack hung the sword,
Satan's dire dread; and in his hand the spear. Milton, P. L.

ZONE. n. s. [ζωνὴ; zona, Lat.]

1. A girdle.

The middle part
Girt like a starry zone his waist, and round
Skirted his loins, and thighs, with downy gold
And colours dipp'd in heav'n. Milton, P. L.
An embroider'd zone surrounds her waist. Dryden.
Thy statues, Venus, though by Phidias' hands
Design'd immortal, yet no longer stands;
The magick of thy shining zone is past,
But Salisbury's garter shall for ever last. Granville.
Scarce could the goddess from her nymphs be known,
But by the crescent and the golden zone. Pope.

2. A division of the earth.

The whole surface of the earth is divided into five zones: the first is contained between the two tropicks, and is called the torrid zone. There are two temperate zones, and two frigid zones. The northern temperate zone is terminated by the tropick of Cancer and the arctick polar circle: the southern temperate zone is contained between the tropick of Capricorn and the polar circle: the frigid zones are circumscribed by the polar circles, and the poles are in their centres.

True love is still the same: the torrid zones,
And those more frigid ones,
It must not know:
For love grown cold or hot,
Is lust or friendship, not
The thing we show;
For that's a flame would die,
Held down or up too high:
Then think I love more than I can express,
And would love more, could I but love thee less. Suckling.
And as five zones th' etherial regions bind,
Five correspondent are to earth assign'd:
The sun, with rays directly darting down,
Fires all beneath, and fries the middle zone. Dryden.

3. Circuit; circumference.

Scarce the sun
Hath finish'd half his journey, and scarce begins
His other half in the great zone of heaven. Milton, P. L.

ZO'NED.* adj. [from zone.] Wearing a zone.

Gay youths advance,
And fair-zon'd damsels form the sprightly dance. Pope, Odyss.

ZOO'GRAPHER. n. s. [ζωὴ and γράφω.] One who describes the nature, properties, and forms of animals.

One kind of locust stands not prone, or a little inclining upward; but in a large erectness, elevating the two fore legs, and sustaining itself in the middle of the other four, by zoographers called the prophet and praying locust. Brown.

ZOO'GRAPHY. n. s. [of ζωὴ and γράφω.] A description of the forms, natures, and properties of animals.

If we contemplate the end, its principal final cause being the glory of its Maker, this leads us into divinity; and for its subordinate, as it is designed for alimental sustenance to living creatures, and medicinal uses to man, we are thereby conducted into zoography. Glanville, Scepsis.

ZOO'LOGICAL.* adj. [from zoology.] Describing living creatures.

ZOO'LOGIST.* n. s. [from zoology.] One who treats of living creatures.

Nor have I seen any thing that interested me as a zoologist, except an otter. Johnson, Lett. to Mrs. Thrale.

ZOO'LOGY.† n. s. [of ζῶον and λόγος, Gr. zoologie, Fr.] A treatise concerning living creatures.

Mr. Mason has added a more particular account of Gray's skill in zoology. Johnson, Life of Gray.

ZO'OPHYTE.† n. s. [ζωόφυτον, of ζῶον and φυτὸν, Gr. zoophyte, Fr.] Certain vegetables or substances which partake of the nature both of vegetables and animals.

They appear in grammar, like zoophites in nature; a kind of middle beings, of amphibious character.
Harris, Hermes, B. 2. ch. 2.

ZOOPHO'RICK Column. n. s. [In architecture.] A statuary column, or a column which bears or supports the figure of an animal. Dict.

ZOO'PHORUS. n. s. [ζωοφορὸς, Gr.] A part between the architraves and cornice, so called on account of the ornaments carved on it, among which were the figures of animals. Dict.

ZOO'TOMIST. n. s. [from zootomy.] A dissecter of the bodies of brute beasts.

ZOO'TOMY. n. s. [ζωοτομία, of ζῶον and τέμνω, Gr.] Dissection of the bodies of beasts.

ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS.

---

*Where this mark * follows the word, it signifies that such word is not to be found in the Dictionary of Dr. Johnson.*

Where this mark † follows the word, it signifies that addition or alteration is made in respect either to the etymology, or definition, or example, of the word given by Dr. Johnson.

To Abash.† Add, to the etymology, "The Hebrew lebesh, to clothe, comprehends the idea of besh, shame; whence our abash, and bashful." Rev. Mr. Jones, of Nayland.

Abbey.† Add, to the etymology, the Fr. abbaie.

Abdicative.† adj. Instead of "that which causes or implies an abdication," read, Causing, or, that causes, implying, or, that implies, &c. In the definition of adjectives, this inaccurate form, that which, (for properly it denotes substantives,) often occurs; it is therefore, once for all, here stated as requiring correction.

Abditory.* n. s. At the close of the definition, read, "money in." And add the following example.

In the center of the kernel of grain, as the safest abditory, is the source of germination.
Dr. Robinson, Endoxa, (1658,) p. 133.

Aberring.† Dr. Johnson says, that of the verb aberr he had found no example. It appears, however, to have been in use.

When, without pondering, we follow the steps of dubious guides, we may soon aberre from the way of truth.
Dr. Robinson, Endoxa, (1658,) p. 143.

Abolete.* Add the following example.

To practise such abolete science. Skelton, Poems, p. 162.

To Abstain.* v. a. [abstineo, Lat.] To keep from; to hinder.

Whether he abstain men from marrying.
Milton, Tetrachordon.

To Accost.† 2. Add, In this sense, the word seems allied to the old Sax. coꞅꞇnian, coꞅꞇian, tentare.

Accoucheur.* The accent should be placed on the last syllable.

Accu'mbency.* n. s. [from accumbent.] State of being accumbent.

No gesture befitting familiar accumbency.
Dr. Robinson, Endox. (1658,) p. 142.

To Addle.† v. n. Dr. Johnson calls this word obsolete. Mr. Boucher defines it "to earn by working," and considers it as a Yorkshire, Staffordshire, Cumberland, and Cheshire word; derived from the Sax. ædlean, or edlean, merces, retributio, remuneratio: whence also addlings, wages received for work. A gentleman has informed me, that in Nottinghamshire, and throughout the north, with some variation of sound, addle and addlings are now in use. He has also obligingly explained the word as used by Tusser, whom Dr. Johnson cites. "Ivy will so embrace a tree as not only to prevent its encrease, but to kill it. Tusser therefore advises to kill the ivy, or the tree will not addle, that is, will not earn or produce any other profit to its owner."

Address.† n. s. Add, as the primary meaning, a preparation of one's self to enter upon any action: with to before the thing. See To Address.

His address to judgement shall sufficiently declare his person and his office and his proper glories.
Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1668,) p. 9.

A'crity.* n. s. [acritas, low Lat.] Sharpness; eagerness.

They are encouraged to it by the acrity of prudence, and severity of judgement. Bacon, Diomed. or Zeal.

ACTUATION.† In the example from Pearson, read, for "not only the motion," not only to the motion.

ADE'PTION.* n. s. [adeptio, Lat.] Attainment.

It beginneth with the mixt adeption of a crown by arms and title. Bacon, Adv. of Learn. B. 2.

ADHESION.† Add, to the second definition,

Sensuality, and stupid adhesion to the objects of the outward senses. More, Myst. of Godliness, (1660,) p. 197.

It must needs be a very strong and peremptory adhesion to virtue, that shall engage a man to quit his life rather than his innocence, and die rather than offend. Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 227.

ADJUTOR.† Add,

All the rest, as his adjutors and assistants, you must awake out of this error. Tr. of the Abp. of Spalato's Rocks of Chr. Shipwr. (1618,) p. 12.

A'DVERSARY.* adj. [adversarius, Lat.] Opposite to; adverse; hostile.

An unvanquishable fort against the impressions and assaults of all adversary forces. Bp. King, Vitis Palat. (1614,) p. 30.

ADVERSENESS.† Add,

A seeming adverseness of events to his endeavours. Barrow, vol. i. S. 5.

To ADU'LTERIZE.* v. n. [from adultery.] To commit adultery.

Such things as gave open suspicion of adulterizing. Milton, Doct. and Discipl. of Divorce.

To A'DVOCATE.* v. n. To perform the office of an advocate.

Give me leave, as most concerned, to advocate in my own child's behalf. Dawbeny, Hist. of Oliv. Cromwell, (1659,) Pref. a. 2.

AFFRONTIVE.† Add,

How much more affrontive it is to despise mercy ruling by the golden scepter of pardon, than by the iron rod of a penal law. South, Serm. on the Restoration.

To AGGLOMERATE.† v. n. Add, To grow into one mass.

A'GGRAVABLE.* adj. [from aggravo, Lat.] Making any thing worse; aggravating.

This idolatry is the more discernible and aggravable in the invocation of saints or angels. More, Antid. against Idol. ch. 2.

AGLET.† For aigulette, read aiguilette.

To A'GONIZE.* v. a. To afflict with agony. The example from Feltham, under the neuter verb, must be transferred to this.

AGRESTICK, or AGRESTICAL.† Add, formerly also agrestial.

Others wild, uplandish, and agrestial. Swan, Spec. Mund. ch. 8. § 2.

A'IMER.* n. s. [from aim.] One who aims.

Leaving the character of one always troubled with a beating and contriving brain, of an aimer at great and high spirits; while he was always poor, and consequently unable to accomplish his desire. Wood, Ath. Ox.

To ALLI'ANCE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To unite by confederacy; to ally.

It [sin] is allianced to none but wretched, forlorn, and apostate spirits. Cudworth, Serm. p. 62.

ALMI'GHTY.* n. s. The Omnipotent; the Maker of heaven and earth; one of the appellations of the Godhead.

By the Almighty, who shall bless thee. Genesis, xlix. 25.

So spake the Almighty, and to what he spake
His Word, the Filial Godhead, gave effect. Milton, P. L.

To AMBULATE.† For v. a. read v. n.

AMENITY.† Add,

The amenity of the story how grateful, and agreeable, it is to flesh and blood! More, Myst. of Godliness, B. 4. ch. 2.

AMNESTY.† The word is not old in our language. Bishop Sanderson is the earliest writer, whom I have found using it. In the "Bewailing of the Peace of Germany," 1635, it is amnestia. "Excluded from pardon and amnestia." p. 46.

AMONG.† The adverb is intermixed with the preposition. After the etymology of AMONG, prep. the definitions, 1. Mingled with, &c. 2. Conjoined with, &c. should follow; and then, after them and their examples, AMONG, adv.

ANACHRONISM.† Read χρόνος.

ANADIPLOSIS.† Read ἀναδίπλωσις

ANALOGY.† To the first definition, add, Dr. Johnson's definition is not exact. There may be the closest resemblance between the circumstances and the effects of two things, and yet no analogy. There is a resemblance between a hat and a coat, in their colour, in their being both on the body, and both tending to keep it warm; but no one would say that there is any analogy. The word signifies the similitude of relations; and so it is given by Euclid, B. 5. only confining the relations to those of magnitude. "Analogy is the similitude of ratios." Thus, in Dr. Johnson's own explanation, learning has the same relation to the mind, which light has to the eye. Hence, analogically, learning is said to enlighten the mind.

ANALYST.† This word was in use nearly a century before bishop Berkeley wrote.

Weaker analysts and chroniclers would boldly take it upon trust from his pen. Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. (1646,) p. 77.

ANBURY.† Add,

This, I have been informed, is the name of a black fly, that devours the turnips in their early state of vegetation. This fly lays its egg in the root of the turnip, and causes those warts or excrescences visible on the outside of it, in each of which may be found a small white worm, called also the anbury, which afterwards becomes that little black fly mentioned above.

To ANEAL.* See To ANELE.

Anealing him that lies a dying. Transl. of the Abp. of Spalato's Serm. (1617,) p. 49.

ANNEX.† n. s. Add,

To which, by way of application, I add these two annexes of holy prayer. Bp. Taylor, Serm. (fol. 1651,) p. 14.

ANSLAIGHT.† For onslought read onslaught.

ANTI'CIPATELY.* adv. [from anticipate.] By anticipation.

It may well be deemed a singular mark of favour, that, what our Lord did intend to bestow on all pastors, that he did anticipately promise to St. Peter. Barrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

ANTIMONY.† For this word, following ANTINOMIST, read ANTINOMY. The examples rightly give antinomy.

APODI'CTICALLY.* adv. [from apodictical.] So as to be evident beyond contradiction.

Mr. Mede's synchronisms are apodictically true to any one that has but a competency of wit, and patience, to peruse them. More, Myst. of Godl. p. 175.

APOTHECARY.† The accent should be placed on the second syllable.

APOTHEGMATIST.† In the example, for senses, read sentences.

APPEASMENT.† Add,

Sacrifices in all religions were held appeasements of the wrath of their gods. More, Myst. of Godl. p. 232.

To Appropinque.† For v. n. read v. a.

Aristocrat.† Add, a favourer of aristocracy.

Artichoke.† For ciocco, a hair, read ciocca, a tuft or lock of hair.

To Artilise.† In the old translation of Montaigne, it is artize. "I would naturalize arte, as much as they artize nature." Florio, Tr. of Mont. 1613, p. 491.

To Ask.† v. n. In Dr. Johnson's first and second editions of his dictionary, this neuter verb is not found. The first and second examples were originally placed under the first definition of the verb active, as they ought to be; and the third and fourth, no less properly, under the active meaning of enquire.

Askew.† In the etymology, for skee read skef, oblique.

Aspergoire.† Add the Fr. aspergeoire; and so Mr. Warton should have written the word.

To Assay.* v. n. To try; to endeavour. The third definition and example, given under the verb active, belong to this neuter verb.

To Astipulate.† Add,

All, but an hateful Epicurus, have astipulated to this truth.
Bp. Hall, Invis. World, B. 2. § 1.

Astrut.† For strowingly, read strowtingly.

Augustness.† Add,

He was daunted at the augustness of such an assembly.
Ld. Shaftesbury, in Walpole's R. and N. Authors.

Avo'cative.* n. s. [from avocate.] That which calls off from; dehortation; dissuasion.

Setting this apart, all other incentives to virtue, and avocatives from vice, seem very blunt and faint.
Barrow on the Creed.

Avoucher.† Add,

This testimony did become an earnest avoucher thereof.
Barrow, vol. ii. S. 29.

Authoress.† Add,

2. A female author; a female writer. This sense is only of recent usage.

Auto'graphal.* adj. [from autograph.] Of the particular handwriting of a person.

In the same page are the following autographal subscriptions.
Bennet on the 39 Articles, (1715,) p. 358.

Awarder.† Add,

The just awarder of vengeance upon those miscreant wretches.
Barrow, vol. i. S. 11.

Ayry. For Sax. ey, read Teut. ey.

Ba'bishly.* adv. [from babish.] Childishly.

One that spake so babishly.
Abp. Usher, Answ. to the Jes. Mal. p. 404.

To Ba'ckward.* v. a. To keep back; to hinder.

No one doth so clog and trash, so disadvantage and backward us, so cast us behind in our race.
Hammond, Works, iv. 663.

Baker-legged.* adj. A person is said to be baker-legged, who hath crooked legs, or goes in at the knees. Sherwood.

To Band.* v. n. Add,

Better it were that a man's desires or passions should band each against other, than that all of them should with joint force band against the spirit or conscience.
Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 538.

Bandy.† n. s. Add to the definition, the play itself.

Bannian.† Perhaps the accent should be placed on the last syllable.

Barrack.† 2. Add the following example.

He [bishop Hall] lived to see his cathedral converted into a barrack, and his palace into an ale-house.
Warton, Hist. E. P. iv. 2.

Battledoor.† Add,

2. A child's horn-book; the first book of children: somewhat resembling a battledoor in shape.

Ba'yed.* adj. Having bays. See Bay in architecture.

The yearly birth
The large-bay'd barn doth fill. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 3.

To Be'acon.* v. a. To afford light as a beacon; to light up.

We have looked so long upon the blaze that Zuinglius and Calvin have beaconed up to us. Milton, Areopagitica.

Beaker.† For biechiere, Ital. read bicchiere.

To Beam.* v. a. To shoot forth; to emit.

This being admitted, that God beams this light into man's understanding. South, Serm. vol. i. S. 8.

To Becri'pple.* v. a. [from cripple.] To make lame.

Those whom you bedwarf and becripple by your poisonous medicines. More, Myst. of Godl. p. 277.

To Befall.† v. n. In the third and fifth senses this verb is neuter; in the rest, active. Add, therefore, To Befall. v. a. with the definitions and examples, as now stated.

Begui'ler.* n. s. [from beguile.] One who beguiles.

To-day a beguiler, to-morrow beguiled.
Wodroephe, Fr. and Eng. Gram. (1623,) p. 476.

Behemoth.† The accent should be placed on the second syllable.

Belled.† Add, adj.

Bellower.† Add,

Mimical squeakers and bellowers.
Echard, Obs. on Answ. to Cont. of the Cl. p. 137.

To Belo've.* v. a. Dr. Johnson says, under beloved, that the verb, to belove, is seldom or never used; and accordingly takes no further notice of it. It was, however, formerly in use.

If beautie were a string of silke, I would weare it about my neck for a certain testimonie that I belove it much.
Wodroephe, Fr. and Eng. Gram. (1623,) p. 322.

Benevolence.† Add, to the second meaning,

That which we distribute to the poor, St. Paul calleth a blessing or benevolence.
Outred, Tr. of Cope on Prov. (1580,) fol. 151. b.

Benting.† Add,

The pigeon never knoweth woe,
Until she doth a benting go. Proverb.

Bergamot.† When signifying a pear, pronounced with the accent on the first syllable, and commonly bergamy: when the essence, with the accent on the last syllable.

To Betide.† v. n. 1. The first example from Shakspeare belongs to the verb active.

To Betray.† v. a. In the etymology, for acuse read accuse.

Bezoa'rtical.* adj. [from bezoar.] Having the quality of an antidote.

Corrected by the healing bezoartical virtue of grace.
Chillingworth, Serm. on Rom. viii. 34. § 52.

Biformed.† Add,

A biformed body. Bacon.

Bile.† n. s. In the etymology, read, Our old dictionaries give it byle, &c.

To Bilk. Add, to the definition, to deceive; to leave in the lurch: with the following example.

Antonius Campanus's fortune was no less capricious than his genius. An unknown country-girl was delivered of him under a tree, where she bilkt him. He was found there by sexton priest of the church; who put the bantling out to nurse, through a pure principle of charity.

Spence, Tr. of Varillas's Sec. Hist. of the H. of Med. (1686,) p. 249.

To BISECT.† For binus and seco, read bis and seco.

To BLABBER.† Add,

Now you may see, how easie it is to speak right, and not to blabber like boors in any speech.
Wodroephe, Fr. and Eng. Gr. (1623,) p. 126.

BLACKGUARD.† Add, used vulgarly as a substantive. Mr. Gifford, in his late edition of Ben Jonson's Works, assigns an origin of the name, different from what the old examples, which I have cited under the adjective, seem to countenance. It has been formed, he says, from those "mean and dirty dependants, in great houses, who were selected to carry coals to the kitchen, halls, &c. To this smutty regiment, who attended the progresses, and rode in the carts with the pots and kettles, which, with every other article of furniture, were then moved from palace to palace, the people, in derision, gave the name of black guards, a term since become sufficiently familiar, and never properly explained." Ben Jons. ii. 169. vii. 250.

From the black-guard to the grim sir in office, there are few hold other tenets.
Beaum. and Fl. Elder Brother.

To BLAZE.† v. a. Add,

3. To set a white mark on trees, by paring off a part of the bark, in order to their being sold or felled: Hence, in advertisements, "the trees are all blazed and numbered."

To BLESS.† v. a. Add,

5. The following example will illustrate the custom of blessing the field, alluded to in this definition.

As though they would turn about and bless all the field.
Ascham, Toxophilus.

BLINDWORM.† Read, believed now not to be venomous.

To BLISSOM.† v. n. Add, to leap as a ram upon the ewe; a word used in Cheshire, and perhaps in other parts of the north.

To BLISSOM.* v. a. To tup: as, the ewes are blissomed.

BLOODSHEDDING.† In the example, for "that we shall," read, that we should, &c.

BLUFFNESS.† Add to the definition, bloatedness.

BOASTING.† In the example, read, all such rejoicing is evil.

BOI'LING.* n. s. [from boil.] Ebullition.

God saw it necessary by such mortifications to quench the boilings of a furious, overflowing appetite and the boundless rage of an insatiable intemperance, to make the weakness of the flesh the physick and restorative of the spirit.
South, Serm. vol. ii. S. 10.

BO'TCHERLY.* adj. [from botcher.] Clumsy; patched.

Publishing some botcherly mingle-mangle of collections out of other.
Hartlib, Transl. of Comen. (1642,) p. 30.

BO'ULIMY.* n. s. Dr. Johnson gives this word as bulimy, and derives it from the Gr. βȣλιμία, of βȣ̃ς, an ox, and λιμὸς, hunger, But it is from βȣ, valdè, greatly.

It stretches out his desires into an insatiable boulimy.
Scott, Serm. (1687,) Works, ii. 75.

BO'UNCINGLY.* adv. [from bounce.] Boastingly, with threat.

Pighius said bouncingly, the judgement of the apostolical see, with a council of domestick priests, is far more certain than the judgement of an universal council of the whole earth sans pope.
Barrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

BRAID.† adj. For "supposes him to be confounded," read, supposes him to be compounded.

BRASS.† Of this word the letters Bra appear to have fallen out in printing.

To BRAY.† v. a. Add,

2. For "to emit," read, To emit with sound.

To BREAK.† v. a. Add,

26. To break a deer. To cut it up at table. Dr. Johnson. — Rather, To open, or cut it up: an operation performed by the park-keeper, or deer-killer, in the slaughter-house. Chambers, edit. Rees.

To BREECH.† In the second definition, for un, read gun.

To BRE'VIATE.† Add,

Though they breviate the text, it is he that comments upon it.
Hewyt, Funer. Serm. p. 92. (1658.)

To BRIDE.* v. a. To make a bride of; to marry.

I knew a man
Of eighty winters, this I told them, who
A lass of fourteen brided. Beaum. and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

To BRISK.* v. a. To make brisk.

Such a vast difference there is in the arteries newly brisked in the fountain, and that in the veins lowered and impoverished with its journey.
Smith on Old Age, p. 109.

BROTHELLER.† Add,

Gamesters, jockies, brothellers impure.
Cowper, Task.

BULLOCK.† In the definition, for "A young bull," read, A young bull gelt, or ox. A gentleman has pleasantly informed me, that Dr. Johnson is not singular in the Irish definition, as he considers it, of a young bull; a great majority of preceding lexicographers having made the same blunder, with Minsheu before their eyes, who, in 1617, defines the word, "a young ox." With the blunderers I must be content to participate the censure; and will add, from the information already noticed, the progressive distinctions of the animal, till he becomes a bullock. "A male calf gelt is called a bull-calf until a year old; when he is called a stirk or yearling; then, a two-year old steer; at three, a three-year old steer; and at four, he first takes the name of ox or bullock."

BUSHEL.† n. s. Add,

3. Bushels of a cart-wheel. I have been informed, that bush is known in this sense, but not bushel.

BUSHET.† Add,

1. A wood. See BUSKET.

Near Creek, in a bushet or wood on a hill, not far from the way-side.
Ray, Rem. p. 251.

2. A common.

We rode through a bushet, or common, called Rodwell Hake.
Ray, Rem. p. 153.

BUT.† conjunct. Add,

9. The words, "it is apparently except, formidable to all, except his friends," are to be removed; as I hastily and wholly mistook the meaning of the example. Dr. Johnson and Dr. Adam Smith are right.

To CA'BALIZE.* v. n. [from cabal.] To speak the language of the learned Jews.

Here St. John seems to cabbalize, as in several places of the Apocalypse, that is, to speak in the language of the learned of the Jews.
More, Myst. of Godliness, B. 1. Ch. 8.

CACOETHES.† Add,

There is a certain distemper, which is mentioned neither by Galen nor Hippocrates, nor to be met with in the London Dispensary. Juvenal, in the motto of my paper, terms it a cacoethes, which is a hard word for a disease, called in plain English, the itch of writing. This cacoethes is as epidemical as the small-pox. Addison, Spect. No. 582.

To CAKE.† v. a. To force into concretions. The example from Shakspeare, under the verb neuter, must be transferred to this active sense.

To CAKE.† v. n. To cackle. Add, a corruption perhaps of cackle.

CALIBRE.† Add,

This seems to be no other than a figurative meaning of the preceding word caliber; and, as such, is old in the French language. See Cotgrave, in V. CALIBRE and QUALIBRE. "Il n'est pas de mon qualibre, He is not of my quality, rank, or humour, &c." It therefore means cast, turn, or stamp. With us, it is modern; and is accented, like the Fr. word, on the second syllable.

CALTROP.†

1. For "an instrument made with three spikes," read, An instrument made with four spikes, and so disposed, that, when thrown on the ground, one of them points upright, &c.

CAMPANIFORM.† Add,

Bind-weed, a beautiful white campaniform. Stukeley, Palæog. Sacr. p. 16.

CANNY.† For "can, to now," read, to know.

CAPTION.† Add,

It is manifest that the use of this doctrine is for caption and contradiction. Bacon, Adv. of Learn. B. 2.

CARPMEALS.† Read, Phillips, World of Words.

CART-ROPE.† Add,

Woe unto them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin as it were with a cart-rope. Isaiah, v. 18.

CATES.† In the example from Milton, after cates, add compar'd.

CATHARTICAL.† Add, as the definition, Purgative.

CATHEDRAL.† adj. Add,

3. In low phrase, antique; venerable; old. Dr. Johnson. — Rather, perhaps, resembling the aisles of a cathedral, in allusion to the Gothick style of building.

And aged elms with awful bend
In long cathedral walks extend.
Sir W. Blackstone, Lawyer's Farewell to his Muse.

CA'THOLICK.* n. s. Usually applied to a papist; a Roman-Catholick.

What two or three as good catholicks as the other deny. Bp. Taylor, Diss. against Popery, ch. 1. § 1.
The unceasing and undisguised efforts of the catholics to prejudice Reformed Religion. Bp. Huntingford, Charge.

CELATURE.† Add to the definition, the thing engraved.

CHAFFINCH.† Add, Phillips is mistaken, in saying that this bird is admired for its song.

CHAR-WOMAN.† In the definition, for accidently, read accidentally.

CHARITABLENESS.† To the definition, add disposition to charity.

CHARLATAN.† In the example from Hudibras, for chartalans, read charlatans.

CHEATABLENESS.† For the definition, read Liableness, or proneness to be deceived.

CHECKER.* A reprover, &c. Add the following example.

Not as a checker, reprover, or despiser, of other men's translations. Coverdale, cited by Lewis, Hist. Tr. of the Bib. p. 95.

To CHEEP.† Add,

I am informed, that in some parts of the north cheep is still applied to the note of a bird newly hatched.

CHICANERY.† Add,

The archbishop said, I hope your majesty will not be offended, that I am cautious of answering questions: no man is obliged to answer questions that may tend to the accusing of himself. His majesty called this chicanery, and hoped he would not deny his hand.
Confer. of the Abp. and Bps. with K. James II. June 8. 1688.

CHIDING. 2. In the example, for whence, read when.

CHI'LIARCHY.* n. s. [χιλιαρχία, Gr.] A body consisting of a thousand men.

The chiliarchies also, or regiments, as I may so call them, of the Lamb, being summed up in this number.
More, Myst. of Godl. p. 195.

To CHILL.* v. n. To shiver.

Ready to chill for cold. Homilies, Against Excess of Apparel.

CHIRURGEON.† To the etymology, add Ιατρος χειρουργων. S. Chrysostom. in Psal. 50. Opp. tom. i. p. 697. edit. Savile.

CHIVALRY.† In the etymology, for equis, read eques.

CHORIAMBICK.† For "or two long," read, two being long, &c.

CHURCH-PREFERMENT.† In the example from Warton, for professed, read possessed.

CIRCUMSTA'NTIABLE.* adj. Capable of being circumstantiated.

The nearer the threatening is reduced to matter, and the more present and more circumstantiable it is made, the more operative it is upon our spirits while they are immerged in matter. Bp. Taylor, Lib. of Prophec. § 14.

CLANDESTINE.† Add,

Their marriage was huddled up after a very clandestine manner. Bp. Stillingfleet, Miscell. (Speech in 1682,) p. 90.

CLANDESTI'NITY.* n. s. [from clandestine.] An act of privacy or secrecy.

Clandestinity and disparity do not void a marriage, but only render the proof more difficult.
Bp. Stillingfleet, Miscell. (Speech in 1682,) p. 87.

To CLUTTER.† Add,

All that they
Bluster'd and clutter'd for, you play.
Lovelace, Luc. Posth. (1659,) p. 73.

To COASSUME.† Read the definition thus,

To take upon one's self one thing or quality together with another.

To COAX.† To the etymology, add,

Serenius refers this word to this Swed. kuska, to entice, from kos, a kiss. This may be further carried to the M. Goth. bikukjan.

COB.† n. s. 3. It is used also generally for a strong pony.

COCKLER.† In the example, for Warton, read Wharton.

COCOA.† In the etymology, read,

Cacaotal, Span. and therefore more properly written cacao. Dr. Johnson. — The word is coca, and coco, both in Spanish and Portuguese: "Coca de India," Dict. Portug. 1701. See also Coco, in Dicc. de la Leng. Castellana.

COEVOUS. Read, One of the same age.

*COGNOSCE'NTE. n. s. [plur. cognoscenti, Ital. of late years used in English.] One who is well versed in any thing; a connoisseur.

Ask a person of the most refined musical taste, an absolute cognoscente, if you please. Mason on Church Musick, p. 77.

COGNOSCIBI'LITY.* n. s. [from cognoscible.] The quality of being cognoscible.

The cognoscibility of God is manifest in and by them.
Barrow, Expos. of the Creed.

To COINQUINATE.† In the edition of Skelton's Poems, from which the example is taken, the word is printed, apparently by mistake, conquinate.

Collative.† Add,

2. Able to confer or bestow.

These words do not seem institutive or collative of power.
Barrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

Collectedness.† Add,

2. State of union or combination.

The soul is of such subtlety,
And close collectedness. More, Sl. of the Soul, iii. 17.

Comme'ndableness.* n. s. [from commendable.] State of being commendable.

He considers very graciously the commendableness of your submission in these circumstances.
Tennison, Lett. to Burnet, Life of Burnet.

Commensal.† Add,

Our demeanure must be no other than such as may become the guests of the great King of Heaven, and the commensals of the Lord Jesus, with whom we do then communicate.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 294.

Commonitive.† Add,

Whose cross was only commemorative and commonitive.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 14.

To Communicate.† In the definition, for " own our power," read, our own power.

Communicatory.* Add, as the definition, Imparting knowledge.

Compa'ssionateness.* n. s. [from compassionate.] State or quality of being compassionate. It is somewhere used by Calamy.

To Componderate.† Add to the definition the word together.

To Comprehend.†

2. For " to contain the mind," read, To contain in the mind.

Conceitedness.† In the definition, read opinionativeness.

To Concelebrate.† Add to the definition, the word together.

Concourse.† Add,

4. Concurrence; agreement.

He that aims at a good end, and knows he uses proper means to attain it, why should he despair of success, since effects naturally follow their causes, and the divine providence is wont to afford its concourse to such proceedings. Barrow, vol. i. S. 1.

No creature can move, or act, or do any thing, without the concourse and co-operation of God.
Sherlock on Providence, ch. 2.

Condescensive.† In the example, for thoughts, read thanks.

Confider.† In the example, for lottering, read loitering.

To Conquer.† v. n. In the example from Shakspeare, read, Of contradiction.

Co'nquerableness.* n. s. [from conquerable.] Possibility of being overcome.

The conquerableness of the object by our own means.
Bp. Reynolds, Works, p. 697.

Consignification.† To the definition add, Act of signifying one thing together with another.

Consolator.† Add,

In some of the Protestant churches, there is a kind of officers termed consolators for the sick. Johnson, Note on the Tempest.

Conspissation.† To the definition add, The act of thickening.

Conspurcation.† Add,

So odious a conspurcation of our holy profession.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 162.

To Contemper.† Add,

I know not whether he be more feared or loved, both affections are so sweetly contempered in all hearts.
Bp. Hall, Charact. (ed. 1608,) p. 61.

Controve'rsary.* adj. [from controverse.] Disputatious.

These controversary points I have rather crost in my way, than taken along with me. Bp. Hall, to his Dioc. Works, ii. 370.

Conversive.† Add,

To be rude or foolish is the badge of a weak mind, and of one deficient in the conversive quality of man.
Feltham, Res. ii. 75.

Converter.† Add,

Egypt had St. Mark for her converter.
Young on Idolatr. Corrupt. ii. 218.

Cooler.† It should be distinguished only with a dagger, †.

Copesmate.† In the etymology, for cutsmate, read cupsmate.

Cornucopia.† Read Cornucopiæ. And add,

Not questioning but this horn will prove a cornucopiæ to you. Addison, Guard. No. 124.

Corriva'lity.* n. s. [from corrival.] Competition; corrivalry.

That very Roman government, which they honoured in a corrivality and opposition to Christ, shall revenge the quarrel of Christ in the utter subversion of these unthankful rebels.
Bp. Hall, Christ and Cæsar.

Corypheus.* Add,

That noted corypheus (Dr. John Owen) of the independent faction. South, Serm. v. 49.

Court-cupboard.† Add n. s.

Cowl.† n. s. To the second definition add,

They found out Christ-Church plate hid in the walls behind wainscot, and in the cellar, and carried it away in a great cowle between two men. A. Wood, Annals Univ. Ox. anno 1642.

Crede'ntial.* adj. Giving a title to credit.

Credential letters were read from the Frisians.
Lett. from the Syn. of Dort, Hales's Rem. p. 106.

Credulousness.† Add,

A woman, whose sex hath been famous ever for devotion and credulousness. Sir E. Sandys, State of Rel. (ed. 1605,) F. 4. b.

Culdees.* Add,

This is all the credible account that I can find of any Culdees in Scotland. In Ireland we read of Culdees at Armagh.
Bp. Lloyd, Acc. of Ch. Gov. (1684,) p. 143.

To Curry.† In the fifth definition, &c. for Donce, read Douce.

Cucquean.* Add, probably from quean, in its worst sense: a woman of ill fame.

Damascene.† Add,

This and the damson are distinct sorts of plums: the damascene is the larger of the two, and not at all bitter; the damson is smaller, and has a peculiar bitter or roughness.

To Dark.† Add,

Still later than the time of Milton.

The businesses and pleasures of life — will dark and deaden the heart to prayer. Bp. Hopkins, Exposit. (1692,) p. 264.

To Dash.† To the etymology add, The word is probably formed from the sound.

Dash.† n. s. Add, to the fourth meaning,

A flash of lightning, or a dash of affectionate rain.
Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651,) p. 176.

Daub.* n. s. [from the verb.] Coarse painting; gross representation.

Riddles are not the daub of dulness; they are strictly and properly the play of wit.
Delany, Rem. on Ld. Orrery's Life of Swift, p. 222.

To Dear. v. a. To make dear. Formerly in use: we now say endear.

Deprived of his deared conversation.
Shelton, Tr. of Don Quix. P. 4. ch. 6.

Debellation.† Add,

The debellation of Salem and Bizance. Sir Tho. More, (1533.)

Dece'itless.* adj. [deceit and less.] Without deceit; not deceiving.

As if that were an epithet in favour, which is intended to aggravation! So he that should call Satan an unclean devil, should imply that some devil is not unclean; or deceivable lusts, some lusts deceitless! Bp. Hall, Old Relig. § 2.

Decrepitude.† Add,

Decrepitude is a solitary quality. Florio, Transl. of Montaigne's Ess. (1613,) p. 554.

Deliciousness.† Add,

Not often found in the plural.

The pleasures and first deliciousnesses of religion. Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651,) p. 155.

To Den. v. n. [from the noun.] To dwell as in a den.

They den among rocks. Chambers, in V. Snake.

To Defer.† v. n.

2. To pay deference, &c. This sense was in use before Pope's time. Lord Clarendon, I think, has somewhere used it. However, the following is an earlier example of it, than that from Pope.

They not only deferred to his counsels in publick assemblies, but he was moreover the umpire of domestick matters. Spence, Tr. of Varillas's Hist. of the H. of Medicis, (1686,) p. 306.

Deordination.* In the example, for Bacon, read Dr. Rawley's Transl. of Bacon, &c. 1657. Where this reference of Bacon, Collect. of Q. Eliz. may again occur, the same rectification is to be made; Bacon having written the Collections in Latin. This circumstance, at the beginning of my labour, escaped me. In the latter part, the references are right. Add also, to the word before us,

Such a general deordination gives a taste and relish to the succeeding government. Abp. Sancroft, Mod. Pol. (1657,) § 10.

Depi'latory.* adj. Taking away hair.

Ælian says that they were depilatory, and, if macerated in vinegar, would take away the beard. Chambers, in V. Urtica Marina.

Deploredly.* The definition should be Lamentably.

Depressor.† Add, to the first meaning,

The greatest depressors of God's grace, and the advancers of man's abilities, were Pelagius and Celestius. Abp. Usher on the Relig. of the Anc. Irish, ch. 2.

Dern.† Add, to the first meaning,

Now with their backs to the den's mouth they sit,
Yet shoulder not all light from the dern pit.
More, Immortal. of the Soul, (1647,) i. i. 10.

Derangement.* Add, This word appears to have been in use at an earlier period than has been supposed.

An irretrievable derangement. Ruffhead, Life of Pope.

To Descry.† Add, to the first meaning,

I cannot blame the Egyptian, that he was so easily induced to descry these unkind Amalekites to merciful Israelites. Bp. Hall, Contempl. on 1 Sam. xxx.

Desi'ccative.* n. s. A dryer; which see.

The ashes of a hedge-hog are said to be a great desiccative of fistulas. Bacon. Nat. Hist. No. 979.

To Despite.† Add,

To what purpose did the Jews cry, The temple of the Lord, whiles they despited the Lord of that temple? Bp. Hall, Reconciler.

Detour.* Add,

This is in fact saying the same thing, only with more detours and circumvolutions. Dean Tucker, Lett. to Dr. Kippis, (1773,) p. 65.

To Detu'rpate. v. a. [deturper, Fr. deturpo, Lat.] To defile. Cockeram.

Errors, superstitions, heresies, and impieties, which had deturpated the face of the church. Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. i. § 11.

To Devirginate. The word is used by Sandys, in his translation of Ovid.

Diacritical.* In the example, for Greex, read Greek.

To Didder.† For v. a. read v. n.

To Digla'diate. v. n. [digladior, Lat.] To fence; to quarrel; to fight.

What else are the writings of many men, but mutual pasquils and satires against each other's lives, wherein digladiating like Æschines and Demosthenes, they reciprocally lay open each other's filthiness to the view and scorn of the world. Hales, Rem. p. 42.

To Dilu'viate. v. n. [diluvio, Lat.] To run or spread as a flood.

Those septentrional inundations, have so wholly diluviated over all the south, that as a raging tempest they have ruined those powerful and flourishing empires. Sir E. Sandys, State of Rel. (ed. 1605,) S. 2.

Dioptricks.† In the definition, for threugh, read through.

Diplo'mated.* part. adj. [from diploma.] Made by a diploma.

Thomas Triplet, M. A. was diplomated doctor of divinity at Oxford. Bp. Kennet, Regist. and Chron. p. 403.

Direful.† In the etymology, for exist, read consist.

Discession.† So the word should be, which stands after Discerption, and is misprinted Dicession; also dicessio, Lat. for discessio.

To Disciple.† Add, In the last citation from Spenser, however, the accent is on the second syllable.

Disco'nsolacy.* n. s. [from disconsolate.] Disconsolateness.

Penury, baseness, and disconsolacy. Barrow on the Creed.

To Disenslave. Add,

Disenslave him from the bondage of Satan. More, Myst. of Godl. p. 244.

To Dishe'vel. v. n. To be spread without order.

Their hair, curling, dishevels about their shoulders. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 300.

Disreputable.* Add,

Why should you think that conduct disreputable in priests, which you probably consider as laudable in yourself? Bp. Watson, Apol. for the Bible, (6th ed.) p. 66.

To Dissemble.† v. n. In the second definition, for Donce, read Douce.

Divisive.* Add,

2. Having the quality of creating division or discord.

The remonstrance was condemned as divisive, factious, and scandalous. Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time.

Documental.* Add,

Documental sentences. More, Myst. of Godliness, (1660,) p. 265.

Dog.† Add,

10. Dog, among carpenters and sawyers, means a piece of iron, or iron rod, about ten or twelve inches long, with a hook at each end, at right angles to each other, with which they fasten a log of timber to the roller at the sawpit, where they saw it.

Do'gly.* adj. Like a dog; churlish. Not in use.

Dyogenes otherwyse called dogly, because he hadde some condycyons of a dogge. Ld. Rivers, Dictes, &c. sign. C. i.

DONNAT.* Add,

Crafty and proud donaughts. Granger on Eccl. (1621,) p. 243.

DORSUM.* For "side of a hill," read ridge.

To DOTE.† v. a. Add,

3. To decay; to wither. Hence the use of dottard; which see.

Such an old oak,—though now it be doted, will not be struck down at one blow. Bp. Howson, Serm. (1622,) p. 33.

To DOUBLE.† v. a. 6. For "To past" &c. read pass.

DOWN. To go.† 1. Read, To be received, to be digested.

DOXOLOGICAL.* Add,

The three first collects are noted to be wholly doxological. Hooper on Lent, p. 353.

To DREDGE.† To gather with a dredge. Add,

They dredge up from the bottom of the sea abundance of a sort of white coral. Ray, Rem. p. 272.

DREGGY.† Add.

Youthful fancies are vanished away through coldness, dryness, and earthliness of the dull dreggy humours. Granger on Eccl. (1621,) p. 322.

DUCK.† 4. For waters, read water.

5. After "slates or stones," add, into the water.

To DUCKOY.† Either this word should be duckcoy, or the substantive duckcoy be written as this.

DUNCE.† Add to the etymology: "The cardinal would write, that he, the said Winter, should study the Dunces Logick Questions, meaning, as I suppose, the Logick Questions of Joh. Duns: [Duns:] But this I speak by the by." A. Wood, Ann. Univ. Ox. in 1529.]

DU'NNISH.* adj. [from dun.] Inclining to a dun colour.

A bird of a dark grey on the head and back;—the five or six first feathers of the wing above of a dark or fuscous colour, near black; underneath, more light or dunnish. Ray, Rem. p. 247.

EAST.† n. s. In the example from Milton, for Pours, read Showers.

ECCLESIASTICK.† n. s. For ministers, read ministries.

EDDISH.† For "preceding year," read the same year.

EDITOR.† Add,

Put case some well-minded printer (as one of the Stephens) is willing to be at an excessive charge, in the fair publication of a learned and useful work for the benefit of the present and following ages; it is most just that he should, from the hands of princes or states, receive a priviledge for the sole impression; that he may recover, with advantage, the deep expence he hath been at: otherwise, some interloper may perhaps underhand fall upon the work at a lower rate, and undo the first editor. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. (ed. 1650,) p. 33.

EDUCTION.† Add, the act of bringing out.

We may manifestly perceive a strange eduction of spirits. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 474.

The eduction of the fœtus. Biblioth. Bibl. vol. i. p. 153.

EFFE'CTUALNESS.* n. s. The quality of being effectual. Sir E. Sandys somewhere uses it. Scott.

E'LOCUTIVE.* adj. [elocutus, Lat.] Having the power of eloquent expression or diction.

Though preaching, in its elocutive part, be but the conception of man. Feltham, Res. ii. 48.

ELUTRIATION.* Add,

After all its transmutations, elutriations, and filtrations in the body. Acc. of Origen, Phenix, (1707,) i. 44.

To EMANATE.† Add,

Beams that emanate perpetually from our bodies to them. Hales, Rem. (Lett. dat. 1630,) p. 290.

EN.* The plural number, &c. Add, and of the substantive; as, children, housen, eyen, oxen.

ENABLEMENT.* Add, the act of enabling.

Learning hath no less power and efficacy in enablement towards martial and military virtue and prowess. Bacon, Adv. of Learn. B. 1.

To ENGENDER.† In the example from Davies, read For by themselves, &c.

To ENSNARL.† 2. To snarl, &c. This should be v. n. not v. a.

To ENSO'BER.* v. a. To make sober; to compose.

God sent him sharpnesses and sad accidents to ensober his spirits. Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651,) p. 170.

To EPICURIZE.† 1. Add, to play the epicure; to feast; to riot: And place the example from Flatman under this meaning.

To EQUIP.† 1. Add,

People who equipped ships for the war against Troy. Bp. Patrick on Judges, v. 14.

ERE.† adv. In the etymol. For Ecclesiastic. xxxiii. read xxiii.

ERUDITE.* Add, The word may be found so far back as 1668, in a mean collection of histories, where Erycius Puteanus is styled "that witty and erudite noble Italian."

To ESCHEW.† To the etymology add, See also schouwen, Teut. in Kilian, vitare, fugere; scheuen, German, the same.

ESPE'CIALNESS.* n. s. [from especial.] State or quality of being especial.

Your precious diamond in especialness. Loe, Bl. of Br. Beauty, (1614,) p. 25.

ESPOUSALS.† Add, Stackhouse uses the word in the singular.

We find that Samson's wife remained with her parents a considerable time after espousal. Hist. of the Bible, B. 8. ch. 1.

To ETCH.* v. n. To practise etching.

Swanevelt painted landscape at Rome;—he etched in the manner of Waterloo; but with less freedom. Gilpin, Ess. on Prints, p. 109.

To ETTLE.* Add, This, Mr. Boucher has observed, is the Cumberland form of addle, to earn by working; eblean, Saxon.

To E'VOCATE.* v. a. [evoco, Lat.] To call forth.

He [Saul] had already shown sufficient credulity, in thinking there was any efficacy in magical operations to evocate the dead. Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bib. B. 5. ch. 3.

To E'XCITATE.* v. a. [excito, Lat.] To stir up.

The Earth, being excitated to wrath, in revenge of her children brought forth Fame, the youngest sister of the giants. Bacon, Sister of the Giants, or Fame.

To EXCRE'TE.* v. a. [excretus, Latin.] To send out by excretion.

The nature and quality of the excreted substance. Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 13. § 2.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 149.

FADE.* adj. Weak; slight; faint.

Tar-water — may extract from the clay a fade sweetishness, offensive to the palate.
Bp. Berkeley, Farther Th. on Tar-Water.

To FADGE.† In the example from Hudibras, for "That dogs," read Like dogs.

FAITHFUL.† Add,

5. True; worthy of belief; that may be confidently relied on.

It is a faithful saying; for if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him.
2 Tim. ii. 11.

FALDSTOOL.† For "within the altar," read, within the rails of the altar.

To FALL down.† 46. Dr. Johnson says, that down adds little to the signification. Surely to the example, 47. it adds emphasis; and in that under 48. it implies, what might not be perceived without it, adoration or supplication. In 66. read, To be ranged with.

FALLOW.† n. s. In the example from Rowe, for limped, read limpid.

FAN.† n. s. In the example from Beaum. and Fl. read, Tis a sweet walk.

To FARE.† In the example from Ecclus. read, at the last.

FASTI'GIATE.* adj. Narrowed up to the top. See FASTIGIATED.

That noted hill, the top whereof is fastigiate, like a sugar-loaf.
Ray, Rem. p. 176.

FATHER.† 7. In the example, for magestick, read majestick.

FEARLESS.† Add, Warburton has once used it in the sense of unfeared. See HONOURLESS.

FE'ASIBLE.* n. s. Whatever is practicable. Bring the example from Glanville, under the adjective, hither.

FEESE.* n. s. A race. Barret, Alv. 1580. He adds, "To leap without fetching any race or feese, nullo procursu salire." It is a word still used among boys; as, to take feese.

The bias of whose bowls doth make the knees,
From whence Love's lightest Muses take their veeze.
Davies, Wit's Pilgr. sign. N. 2. b.

To FELLOW.† v. a. Add,

Fellowing himself with every thing that had life in it.
Bp. Hall, Sel. Thoughts, § 100.

FENCEFUL. Add,

A fenceful shield.
Pope, Odyss. 16.

FE'RETORY.* n. s. [feretrum, Latin.] A place in churches where the bier is set.

A third shrine was prepared, whereon to place the other two, and inclose his sacred body. The upper part of this feretory was all covered with plate of the purest gold.
Keepe, Monum. Westm. p. 137.

To FIDGET.† Add,

Our lively hostess, whose fancy was impatient of the rein, fidgeted at this, and ventured to say, Nay this is too much.
Boswell, Life of Johnson.

To FILE.† v. n. 1. In the example from Blackmore, read, at the call.

FIRER.† Add,

2. One who incites or inflames.

Kindlers and firers of men's minds.
Articles of Rel. 1536.

FIZGIG.† Add,

3. A gadding flirt.
Cotgrave, in V. Trotiere.

Then sterte forth a fisgigge,
And she brought a bore-pigge.
Skelton, Poems, p. 138.

To FLANK.* v. n. To border; to touch.

That side, which flanks on the sea and haven, needs no art to fortify it, nature having supplied that with the inaccessibility of the precipice.
Butler, Rem. (ed. Thyer,) i. 417.

To FLASH.† v. n. Add,

4. To rise in flashes; to dash.

The flashing waves divide.
Pope, Odyss. 6.

To FLECK.† In the example from Dryden, for strain, read stain.

FLITTING.† Add,

1. Dr. Johnson defines this word, in the first instance, a fault; a failure. This assertion may be doubted. The example given is from Ps. lvi. 8. which in the Bible translation is rendered wanderings; and which bishop Patrick thus paraphrases: "Thou art perfectly acquainted how often I have been forced to fly, like a vagabond, from place to place; which hath cost me many a tear." See also Poli Synops. Crit. where the word is migrationes, vagationes, fugas. Vol. ii. P. i. col. 913. We may consider, therefore, flittings, used in the translation of the psalm in our common-prayer books, as meaning no more than wandering, or removal from place to place.

FLUXION.† 3. In the definition, for "as infinite," read, an infinite.

FOISON.† In the first example from Tusser, for thou, read they.

FO'RAGING.* n. s. [from To Forage.] Predatory inroad; forray.

It was three days since this gainful forraging of Amalek.
Bp. Hall, Contempl. on 1 Sam. xxx.

A Libian tiger drawn from his wilder foragings.
Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651,) p. 216.

FO'REL.* n. s. [forellus, forulus, Lat. fourreau, Fr. "id quo aliquid tegitur et obvolvitur, &c." Carpent. Suppl. Du Cange. "Vagina: parmi les anciens auteurs, signifie l'armoire à livres." Menage, in V. FOUREAU.] A kind of parchment; sheepskin dressed on one side only, commonly used for covers of account-books. The word is still familiar among stationers.

No maner of persone shall sell this present booke, unbounde, above the price of two shillynges and two pence; and bounde in forell for iis. xd. and not above.
The Booke of the Common Praier, (fol. 1549,) last leaf.

FORWARD.† adj. In the example from Gal. ii. 10. read forward.

FRESHWATERED.* Read, in the definition, or perhaps newly watered.

FRET.† n. s. Add,

6. In heraldry, a bearing composed of bars crossed and interlaced, and called the herald's true lover's knot.

FROCK.† Add,

This word must be referred to the same origin as rochet; which see.

FUB.† n. s. Add,

'Tis he that I told you is to marry my Indian fubs of a sister.
Crown, Sir Courtly Nice, (1735,) p. 87.

FU'LVID.* adj. [fulvidus, Lat.] Of a deep yellow colour.
Scott.

The fulvid eagle.
More, Song of the Soul, i. 3.

FUNNY.* adj. Add,

I have done his sermon more honour than is really its due, in wasting a whole day in writing some funny remarks upon it.
Rem. upon a Serm. preached at All Souls' Coll. Nov. 2. 1759, p. 22.

FUSTIGATION.* Add,

They punished such as swore falsely by their prince, with fustigation. Abp. Sancroft, Mod. Pol. (1657,) § 7.

GARRULOUS.† Add, In use nearly a century before Thomson's time.

Busy and garrulous men. Bp. Reynolds, Works, p. 717.

GERMANDER.† Add,

Little heaps, in the nature of mole-hills, should be set, some with wild thyme, some with pinks, some with germander, that gives a good flower to the eye. Bacon, Ess. of Gardens.

GE'RMINANT.* adj. [germinans, Lat.] Sprouting; branching.

Prophecies are not fulfilled punctually, at once, but have springing, and germinant accomplishment throughout many ages. Bacon, Adv. of Learn. B. 2.

To GIFT.* Add,

The next duty is, after he hath thus gifted himself, to govern others with moderation.
Bp. Andrews, Expos. of the Dec. 5th Comm.

GI'GGLE.* n. s. [from the verb.] A kind of laugh.

A smile, a giggle, or a hum. Barrow, Serm. i. 184.

GLAUCOUS.* Add,

The leaves are small, of a glaucous colour.
Ray, Rem. p. 182.

GNAWER.† Add,

Plautus calls him [the backbiter] "mus nominis," a mouse (that is the gnawer, or eater up,) of one's good name.
Bp. Andrews on the Dec. (ed. 1650,) p. 507.

GONE.† 2. After sister, in the example, place a colon.

GONG.* 2. Add,

The Chinese believe that during eclipses of the sun and moon these celestial bodies are attacked by a great serpent, to drive away which they strike their gongs or brazen drums.
Douce, Illustr. of Shakspeare, i. 29.

To GOOD.* Add,

A fruitful hill not by nature, but by grace: nature was like itself in it, in the world: God hath taken it from the barren downs, and gooded it. Bp. Hall. Fast-Serm. (1628.)

GO'RING.* n. s. [from gore.] Puncture; prick.

His horses' flanks and sides are forc'd to feel
The clinking lash, and goring of the steel. Dryden, Æn.

GRANDILOQUENCE.* Add,

The prophet has promised them with such magnificent words, and enthusiastick grandiloquence.
More, Myst. of Godl. p. 271.

GRATIFIER.* n. s. [from gratify.] One who gratifies, or delights.

Bacchus, Ceres, and other eminent persons amongst the heathens, who were great gratifiers of the natural life of man.
More, Myst. of Godl. p. 169.

GRAVID.* Add, The word is old.

A careful husband over his gravid associate.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 25.

GRA'VIDATED.* adj. [gravidatus, Lat.] Great with young.

Her womb is said to bear him, to have been gravidated, or great with child. Barrow, vol. ii. S. 24.

GREYHOUND.† Add, to the etymology,

Mr. Pegge follows Blount's opinion; and observes, that "gyre-falcon, according to Phillips, is the largest sort of falcon, next in size to the eagle. So, I conceive, the greyhound was originally gyre-hound, as being the largest, tallest, and swiftest species of hound. The letter r, being transposed into the place of the y, will produce grye-hound." Anecd. of the Eng. Lang. 2d edit. p. 350.

GRIMACE.† 2. For affection, read affectation.

GROTESQUE.† adj. So it should be; it is misprinted Grotesque.

GROUNSEL.† Read, GROUNDSEL.

GURGION.† Add,

Harrison, however, uses gurgeons in this sense. Descript. of Eng. (in Holinshed vol. i.) p. 168. col. 2.

HACK.* n. s. [from the second meaning of To hack.] Hesitating or faltering speech.

He speaks to this very question, with so many hacks and hesitations. More, Myst. of Godl. (1660,) p. 270.

HEATLESS.* In the example from Hughes, for grow, read glow.

To HE'AVY.* v. a. [from the adjective.] To make heavy. Formerly in use.

Their eyes were hevyed, and they knewen not what they schulden answere to him. Wickliffe, St. Mark, xiv.

HENDI'ADIS.* n. s. [ἓν διὰ δυοῖν, Gr.] A rhetorical figure, when two noun substantives are used instead of a substantive and adjective. Scott.

To HEW.* v. n. Needless: it belongs to the third sense of the active verb.

HOAR.* n. s. Add, to the definition, hoariness.

HOLIDAM.† For "see halidam," read halidom.

To HOOK.* v. n. To bend; to have a curvature.

Her bill hooks, and bends downwards.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 383.

HORTATORY.† Add,

This word was but plausible and hortatory.
Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

JACKAL.† This is the Persian schakal.

JACKANAPES.† 1. Add,

I believe he hath robb'd a jackanapes of his gesture; marke but his countenance; see how he mops, and how he mowes, and how he strains his lookes! Riche, Faults, &c. (1606,) p. 7.

JACTITATION.† Add,

3. [jactitatio, low Lat.] Vain boasting.

Shall the jactitation of his friends be instead of a public revocation on his own part?
Archd. Ibbetson, Plea for the Subscr. of the Clergy to the 39 Art. of Rel. (1772.)

To JAUNT.† v. n. Add,

I'm weary with the walk,
My jaunting days are done. Beaum. and Fl. Wit at Sev. Weapons.

To IDENTIFY.* 2. Add.

All the divine perfections, being intrinsical unto and identified with the divine nature or essence. Barrow, Works, i. 391.

IDOLIZER.* Add,

Overdoting idolizers of the faculty of free-will.
More, Myst. of Godl. p. 281.

To JERK.† v. a. Add,

2. To throw a stone by hitting the arm against the side; contrasted with throwing, which is done with the arm at full length. A common, and probably an old, word among boys.

JERK.† n. s. Add,

3. A throw; a cast; the act of jerking. [from the second meaning of the verb.]

ILLUSTRATOR.* Add,

The right gracious illustrator of virtue
Chapman. Sonnets at the end of his Homer.

To IMBOSK.* v. a. [See the neuter verb.] To conceal; to hide.

Requesting him to depart, and imbosk himself in the mountain, which was very near.
Shelton, Tr. of Don Quix. fol. 46. b.

To IMBRE'ED.* v. a. [in and breed.] To generate within; to inbreed; to produce.

These Jesuits endeavour by all means to imbrede that fierceness and obstinacie in their scholars.
Sir E. Sandys, State of Rel. H. 3. b.

IMMATERIAL.† 2. Add,

The censure of Dr. Johnson on this usage of immaterial is questionable, when the second sense of material is considered; to which this is opposed. See MATERIAL.

IMMORI'GEROUS.* adj. [immoriger, immorigerus, Lat.] Disobedient; ungentle. See MORIGEROUS.

Such creatures as are immorigerous, we have found out expedients to reclaim.
Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bib. i. 150. fol. ed.

IMMORI'GEROUSNESS.* n. s. [from immorigerous.] Disobedience.

All degrees of delay are degrees of immorigerousness and unwillingness. Bp. Taylor, Grand Exemplar.

To IMPERSONATE.* Add,

The Egyptians, who impersonated nature, had made her a distinct principle, and even deified her under the name of Isis.
Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 268.

I'MPETRATIVE.* adj. [from impetrate.] Able to obtain by intreaty.

O Saviour, Thy prayers which were most perfect and impetrative, are they by which our weak and unworthy prayers receive both life and glory. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

IMPRACTICABLENESS.† 2. Add,

The greatest difficulty in these sieges was from the impracticableness of the ground.
Burnet, Hist. of his own Time, (Q. Anne.)

IMPU'TATIVELY.* adj. [from imputative.] By imputation; attributively.

Sarah made choice of a slave, rather than a free woman, to bring to her husband's bed, that the child, which the slave might happen to bear, might imputatively, at least, be accounted hers. Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bible, B. 3. ch. 1.

INCOMPA'SSIONATENESS.* n. s. [from incompassionate.] Want of tenderness or pity.

The incompassionateness of other great men, which were merciless, cruel, and hard-hearted.
Granger, on Eccl. (1621,) p. 94.

INCONCINNITY.* Add,

Such is the inconcinnity and insignificancy of Grotius his interpreting of the six seals; which is quite otherwise in Mr. Mede. More, Myst of Godl. p. 184.

INCRASSATIVE.† n. s. For Having, read, That which has.

INCURIOSITY.* Add,

Thinking all things become a good man; even his gestures and little incuriosities. Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651,) p. 195.

INDEFI'CIENCY.* n. s. [in and deficiency.] The quality of suffering no decay.

He (God) took care of their meat and drink, and indeficiency of their clothing. Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bible, B. 4. ch. 1.

INDEFI'CIENT.* adj. [in and deficient.] Not failing; perfect; complete.

Faith heightened into vision, hope satisfied in possession, love completed in fruition, peace consummated in immutable, inconcussible, and indeficient delectation. In these four things seem to consist the endowments of glorified souls, so far as we can here frame any judgement of the glory to come.
Bp. Reynolds, Works, p. 1107.

To INDICT.† Add,

3. To proclaim. [indictus, Lat.]

There be diverse instances of popes applying themselves to the emperors to indict synods.
Barrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

To INODIATE.* Add, I have been informed, that bishop Andrews uses this word; but the reference to the passage, in which it occurs, has been mislaid.

INSATI'ETY.* n. s. [in and satiety.] Insatiableness: an elegant word.

A confirmation of this insatiety, and consequently unprofitableness by a cause thereof: "When goods increase, they are increased that eat them." Granger on Eccl. (1621,) p. 123.

To INSI'DIATE.* v. a. [insidior, Lat.] To lie in ambush for.

Weever, who labour'd in a learned strain,
To make men long since dead to live again,
And with expence of oil and ink did watch
From the worm's mouth the sleeping corpse to snatch,
Hath by his industry begot a way
Death (who insidiates all things) to betray.
Epit. on Weever, the Antiquary, and under his Portrait.

INEXECU'TION.* n. s. [in and execution.] Non-performance. This word has been lately pronounced an Americanism, in a "Vocabulary, or Collection of Words and Phrases which have been supposed to be peculiar to the United States of America, by John Pickering, 8vo. Boston, 1816:" wherein it is said, that "English writers use the term non-execution;" and the American example is, "the inexecution of the treaty of peace," from Judge Marshall's Life of Washington. Vocab. p. 113. It happens, however, that this is an old overpassed English word.

They not only deferred to his counsels in public assemblies, but he was moreover the umpire of domestick matters, and decided quarrels arising between husbands and wives, without there ever being any inexecution or complaint against his decisions and decrees.
Spence, Tr. of Varilla's Hist. of the H. of Medicis, (1686,) p. 306.

INSOLI'DITY.* n. s. [in and solidity.] Want of solidity; weakness.

A demonstration of the insolidity of this exception against Mr. Mede. More, Myst. of Godl. p. 201.

INSPERSION.† Add,

We stain it [the heart] with so many blots and vitious inspersions. Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651,) p. 93.

INSPEXIMUS.* Add, after charters, confirming a grant already made by a former king or benefactor.

INSTAURA'TOR.* n. s. [instaurator, Latin.] A renewer; a restorer.

They pretend to be the great instaurators of his empire, and beginners of the blessed millenium.
More, Myst. of Godl. p. 203.

INSTRUCTIVENESS.* Add,

The pregnant instructiveness of the Scripture.
Boyle, St. of Hol. Script. p. 130.

To INSULT.* v. n. Add,

Too many insult in this just punishment, who have deserved more. Bp. Hall, Occas. Med. § 52.

INTRIGUE.† For Goth. triggua, read triggwo.

IRASCIBILITY.* For "State of being angry," read, Propensity or disposition to anger.

IRRECONCILABLE.† In the etymol. read, formerly irreconciliable.

IRREVERSIBLENESS.* Add,

A precedent of the irreversibleness of oaths.
Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bib. B. 5. ch. 2.

To JUICE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To moisten.

Some gallants perchance, whose curious palates count all conquests dry meat which are not juyced with blood, will dispraise this emperour's victory for the best praise thereof, because it was so easily gotten without drawing his sword for it.
Fuller, Holy War, p. 164.

JU'MBLEMENT.* n. s. [from jumble.] Confused mixture.

Shall we think this noble frame was never made? or that it was made by a casual jumblement of atoms?
Hancock, in Boyle's Lect. Sermons, ii. 210.

Knotted.† 1. Add, full of protuberances.
You shall be ill cured of the knotted gout, if you have nothing else but a wide shoe. Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651,) p. 169.

La'trociny.* n. s. [latrocinium, Latin.] Robbery; larceny.
When oppression ruled, and government was turned into mere latrociny, private force must be deemed lawful in all.
Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bib. B. 3. ch. 5.

Laudableness.† Add,
There is something however, I hope, in the laudableness of my intention. Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bib. Ded.

Lave-eared.* adj. Applied in Northamptonshire to horses that have large ears, or with ears not erect, but further apart at the tip, and of course hanging down or slouching.
A lave-ear'd asse with gold may trapped be.
Bp. Hall, Sat. ii. 2.

Lazy.† In the etymol. for "Sed Ricardo," read, Sub Ricardo.

Lin.* n. s. [perhaps from lizan, Sax. ducere.] A mere or pool, from which rivers spring. Drayton.
Recount her rivers from their lins. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 9.

Literalist.* Add,
I shall substitute the sense of Mr. Mede, which the coarsest literalist cannot evade. More, Myst. of Godl. p. 192.

Loch.* 1. In the definition, for medine, read medicine.

Lock.† n. s. 5. In the example from Sandys, read, a lock of hair on the crown, &c.

Londoner. In the example from Howell, for purse, read pulse.

Longi'nquity.* n. s. [longinquitas, Lat.] Remoteness; not nearness.
Longinquity of region doth cause the examination of truth to be over-dilatory. Barrow.

Look.† n. s. Add,
4. Watch. With out: as, they kept a good look-out.

Lutheran.* n. s. In the example from Shakspeare, read Spleeny.

To Maunder.† Add,
2. To beg. [maundier, French.]
Beg, beg, and keep constables waking; maunder for buttermilk! Beaum. and Fl. Th. and Theodoret.

Meed.† 1. Add, to the definition, except by poets.

Mess.† 2. In the second example from Shakspeare, read, He and his toothpick, &c.

Metachronism.* Add, to the definition, placing an event after the time when it really happened.

Metaphysicks.† n. s. In the definition, read, affections.

To Miche.† Add, I consider the old French as the origin of our word; mucer, musser, to conceal, to lurk, Cotgrave; mucha, concealed, Kelham.

Minacious.† Add,
Whether the face of heaven smile upon us with a chearful bright azure, or look upon us with a more sad and minacious countenance, dark pitchy clouds being charged with thunder and lightning to let fly against the earth.
More, Myst. of Godliness, (1660,) p. 63.

Minaret.* Add, as the etymon,
"High slender turrets which the Mahometans term minars, i. e. towers." Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 142.

Misanthropical.* Add,
The vanities of misanthropical covetousness.
Granger on Eccl. (1621,) p. 101.

Moli'minous.* adj. [from molimen, Lat.] Extremely important.
Prophecies of so vast and moliminous concernment to the world. More, Myst. of Godl. p. 281.

Mulish.* Add,
The curbs invented for the mulish mouth of headstrong youths were broken. Cowper, Task.

Myrmidon.† For μυρμηδὼν, read μυρμιδὼν.

Næve.* Add, It was certainly in use long before Dryden employed it.
Warts, neves, inequalities, roughness.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 566.

To Ni'ggle. v. a. To mock; to play on contemptuously.
I shall so niggle ye,
And juggle ye. Beaum. and Fl. Pilgrim.

Nine.* adj. Five and four. Bring the examples from L'Estrange and Swift, under the substantive, hither.

Ninefold.† For n. s. read adj.

Nook.† In the second example from Shakspeare, for foggy, read slobbery.

Nosed.* 1. Add,
The slaves are nos'd like vulturs.
Beaum. and Fl. Sea-Voyage.

Oa'ky.* adj. [from oak.] Hard as oak.
I tell you of the oaky, rocky, flinty hearts of men turned into flesh. Bp. Hall, Estate of a Christian.

To Obdu'rate. v. a. To harden; to make obdurate.
They are obdurated to the height of boldness.
More, Myst. of Godl. p. 38.

Obeli'scal.* adj. [obeliscus, Lat.] In form of an obelisk.
In the open temples of the druids, they had an obeliscal stone, set upright. Stukeley, Palæogr. Sacr. p. 16.

To Obfi'rm. v. a. [obfirmo, Lat.] To resolve; to harden in resolution.
The obfirmed traitor knows his way to the high-priest's hall, and to the garden; the watchword is already given, Hail, master! Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

To Obla'trate. v. n. [oblatro, Lat.] To bark or rail against any one. Cockeram.

To O'bserate. v. a. [obsero, Lat.] To lock up; to shut in. Cockeram.

Officially.* Add,
2. Agreeably to the duties of an office; by virtue of an office.

Omi'ssive.* adj. [omissus, Lat.] Leaving out; overpassing.
This silence is no argument of their existence, because we find him omissive in other particulars of the like nature.
Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bible, B. 7. ch. 4.

On.† prep. 15. In the example from Pope, for progess, read progress.

One.† n. s. 12. In the fifth example, read Atterbury.

OPPROBRIUM.* In the etymology, I have noticed opprobry as the old word. I have since found Dr. Johnson himself using it.

Patch was in old language used as a term of opprobry.
Johnson, Note on Shaksp. Mids. N. Dream.

ORGIES.† Add, I find this word used in the singular.

It would have resembled an orgy to Bacchus.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 118.

PA'CKAGE.* n. s. [from pack.] A bale; a parcel of goods packed.

PADUASOY.* Add, from soye, Fr. silk. It is written also padesoy.

PAGODA.† In the etymology, for somes, read sometimes.

PALTRY.† To the etymology add, " Paltring worldly gayne." Wood, Transl. of Bp. Gardiner's De Ver. Obed. 1553. sign. i. 7. b.

PARGET.† To the etymology, add, I find in the ancient Prompt. Parv. " spargetting of walls, litura." If this be the same word as parget, the derivation is from the Lat. spargo, to sprinkle.

PARI'AL.* } n. s. Three of a sort at certain games
PAIR-ROYAL. } of cards. It is pronounced, as in the first form. Mr. Mason has cited the following example under the latter.

Each one prov'd a fool,
Yet three knaves in the whole,
And that made up a pair-royal. Butler, Rem.

PASSIONLESS.* Add,

It had stood better with the honour of the synod, to have held a more peaceable and passionless order.
Hales, Lett. from the Syn. of Dort, p. 79.

PEASANTRY.† Add,

2. Behaviour of peasants; rusticity; coarseness.

As a gentleman, you could never have descended to such peasantry of language. Butler, Rem. (ed. Thyer,) p. 332.

PECCABLE.† In the example, for Barrow, read Berrow. And add,

As creatures, they are peccable.
Waterhouse on Fortescue, p. 221.

To PEDDLE.† Add,

2. To sell as a pedlar.

Peddling women cry Scotch cloth of a groat a yard.
Crown, Comed. of Sir Courtly Nice.

PELLS.† For excituum, read exituum.

PETTINESS.† Add,

These pettinesses being below the Divine Majesty to catch at. More, Myst. of Godl. p. 175.

PHILANTHROPY.† Add,

The supposition we would willingly make, is certainly most agreeable to that impartial goodness and philanthropy of God, which the sacred writers so much celebrate.
Plaifere, Of the Salv. of the Heathen, (ed. 1719, written early in the 17th cent.) p. 214.

PI'CKNICK.* n. s. I find this recent cant expression to be Swedish. " Picknick. An assembly of young people of both sexes at a tavern, where every one pays his club." Widegren, Swed. and Eng. Lexic. Stockholm, 1788. The English meaning seems to be a select feasting assembly, where each person makes some particular contribution towards the general entertainment.

PIG-HEADED.* Add to the definition, and to an obstinate person.

To PIP.† For v. a. read v. n.

PLUMPER.† Add,

2. In colloquial language, when at elections a man has two votes for two separate candidates, and gives a single vote to one, it is called giving him a plumper; the person also, who so votes, is called a plumper.

POLICE.† The accent is usually on the last syllable.

POLL.† n. s. 1. Add to the definition, the back part of the head.

PONTIFI'CIAN.* adj. Papistical: pontificial.

The pontifician laws. Bp. Hall, Peacemaker, § 12.

PO'RTERLY.* adj. [from porter.] Coarse; vulgar; like a porter.

For want of good sense, [they] are forced too often to fill up their discourse, and maintain a conversation, in the porterly language of swearing and obscenity.
Dr. Bray, Ess. on Necess. and Useful Knowledge, (1697,) Pref.

PO'TENTACY.* n. s. [from potentate.] Sovereignty.

The Roman episcopacy had advanced itself beyond the priesthood into a potentacy. Barrow.

*POULE. n. s. [French.] The stakes of all the players, to be played for at some games of cards. Mason.

What say you to a poule at comet at my house?
Southerne, Maid's L. Pr.

To PREA'MBLE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To preface; to introduce.

Some will preamble a tale impertinently. Feltham, Res. i. 93.

To PRE'GRAVATE.* v. a. [prægravo, Lat.] To bear down; to depress.

The clog, that the body brings with it, cannot but pregravate and trouble the soul in all her performances.
Bp. Hall, Invis. World, B. 2. § 1.

PREPO'TENT.* adj. [præpotens, Lat.] Mighty; very powerful.

Here is no grace so prepotent but it may be disobeyed.
Plaifere, App. to the Gospel, ch. 14.

PRESTI'GIATOR.* n. s. [præstigiator, Lat.] A juggler; a cheat.

This cunning prestigiator [the devil] took the advantage of so high a place, to set off his representations the more lively.
More, Myst. of Godliness, p. 105.

PREVE'NTABLE.* adj. [from prevent.] Capable of being prevented.

The ignorance of the end is far more preventable (considering the helps we have to know it) than of the means.
Bp. Reynolds, Works, p. 771.

To PRINK.* v. a. To dress or adjust to ostentation.

They who prink and pamper the body, and neglect the soul, are like one, who, having a nightingale in his house, is more fond of the wicker cage than of the bird. Howell, Lett. iv. 21.

PRY.* n. s. [from the verb.] Impertinent peeping.

Secluded from the teazing pry
Of Argus curiosity. Smart, Mowers at Dinner

QUEASINESS.† Add,

A fouler stench — than that which this young queasiness retches at. Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

RA'BIDNESS.* n. s. [from rabid.] Fierceness; furiousness.

Protected against the malice, the envy, the fury, and the rabidness of self-ended man. Feltham, Res. ii. 66.

RACK-RENT.† } These words will be better explained
RACK-RENTER. } by the following information which a friend has given to me. Rack-rent is simply opposed to the rent of a beneficial lease: it is an annual rent, and supposed to be the full value or rent, but would be called a rack-rent, from the nature of the tenure, though it might not be worth more than half what it would be let for.

Rag.† Add,

5. A ragged bluish stone, of which whetstones are made. See Ragstone.

To Rapt.† for v. n. read v. a.

Redstreak.† 1. Add,

Let every tree in every orchard own
The redstreak as supreme. Philips.

Reit.† Add,

Calling it the sea of weeds, or sedge, of flag or rush, tang, rack or reet, in Latin alga; which reddish weeds in abundance grew in it. Bp. Richardson, on the O. Test. (1655,) p. 11.

To Reluct. For "struggle again," read, struggle against.

Remu'gient.* adj. [remugiens, Lat.] Rebellowing.

Earthquakes accompanied with remugient echoes and ghastly murmurs from below. More, Myst. of Godliness, (1660,) p. 63.

Rendible.* It has been suggested to me, that in the example from Howell, rendible is perhaps a misprint for renderable. I think not. Cotgrave translates the Fr. rendable into rendible, renderable, making these two words synonymous.

Review.† n. s. 3. Add,

She sees him now in sash and solitaire
March in review with Milo's strut and stare.
Nevile, Imit. of Juv. (1769,) p. 70.

To Revisit.† Add,

2. Formerly, to revise; to review.

They [laws] may hereafter be not only better executed, but also, if the case so require, be revisited.
Abstract of Acts, Canons, &c. temp. Q. Eliz. Pref.

Rhi'no.* n. s. A cant word for money.

Fools lose places for ready rhino.
Wagstaffe, Miscell. Works, (1726,) p. 322.

Ri'baldish.* adj. [from ribald.] Disposed to ribaldry.

They have a ribaldish tongue. Bp. Hall, Estate of a Christian.

To Ri'nglead. v. a. [ring and lead.] To conduct.

For that he useth no true compass, nor card, he ringleads them to all wrack.
Transl. of Abp. of Spalato's Serm. (1617,) p. 34.

Rung.* n. s. 1. Add,

So many steps or rongs as it were of Jacob's ladder.
Bp. Andrews, Serm. (1631,) p. 560.

Ru'ttle.* n. s. Rattle in the throat. Still a vulgar term.

The last agonies, the fixed eyes, and the dismal ruttle, tell all those about the dying-bed, that he, who is in that plight, is now going to his home. Burnet, Serm. (1713,) p. 175.

Sa'ndiness.* n. s. [from sandy.] The state of being sandy.

Let such pretenders suspect the sandiness and hollowness of their foundation. South, Serm. vol. iv. S. 3.

Scald.† adj. Add, to the example,

A scabbed horse is fit for a scald squier.
Minsheu, Span. Dict. Dial. p. 28.

Sco'lding.* n. s. [from scold.] Clamorous, rude, and quarrelsome language.

The bitterest and loudest scolding is for the most part among those of the same street. South, Serm. vol. iii. S. 8.

Sco'rny.* adj. [from scorn.] Deserving scorn. Not in use.

Ambition — scrapes for scornie drosse.
Mir. for Mag. p. 506.

Scrag.† n. s. Add to the etymology, perhaps (after all) from our old word shrag, to trim, to lop, to thin trees. See To Shrag.

Scrannel.† Add,

Wachter refers this word to the German schreien, clamare, vociferari; and this suggests another definition for the "scrannel pipe," namely, that of screaming or harsh.

Scre'wer.* n. s. [from screw.] Whoever or whatever screws.

It [musick] seemeth a screwer up of lower passions.
Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. p. 484.

Scriba'tious.* adj. [from scriba, Lat.] Skilful in writing; fond of writing.

Popes were then not very scribatious, or not so pragmatical.
Barrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

To Scruze.† In the example, for scruz, read scruz'd.

Scupper-Holes. 2. Read, Maydman, Naval Spec. &c.

Selfheal. For brunella, read prunella ; and correct the definition thus. A plant: the name is also sometimes given to another plant called sanicle.

Shanty.* Add,

Each shanté spark that can the fashion hit.
Epilogue to Sir Courtly Nice, (1735.)

To Sheave. v. a. [from sheaf.] To bring together; to collect.

As for the work itself, it is sheaved up from a few gleanings in part of our English fields. Ashmole, Theat. Chem. (1652,) Prol.

Sice.† Add,

What reason can he have to presume, that he shall throw an ace rather than a sice? South, Serm. i. 281.

To Slant. v. a. To turn aslant or aside. Fuller writes this word slent.

Nimbleness was very advantageous to break and slent the down-right rushings of a stronger vessel.
Fuller, Holy War, p. 210.

Sla'nting.* n. s. [from slant.] Oblique remark.

Bellarmine — wanted nothing but a good cause to defend; generally writing ingeniously, using sometimes slenting, seldom down-right railing. Fuller, Holy State, p. 60.

To Slu'mber.† v. a. 1. Add,

When the tempest doth arise, which may disquiet us, throw us from our station, we may be ready and able, if not to becalme and slumber it, yet to becalme ourselves.
Farindon, Serm. (1657,) p. 431.

Smerk.† } Smirk. } n. s. Add,

The Pict stood before him in the utmost confusion, with the prettiest smirk imaginable on the finished side of her face, pale as ashes on the other. Spectator, No. 41.

Some.† A termination of many adjectives, &c. Add, "Sum is also, among the Saxons, used as a termination, signifying something less than the termination ful; and denotes a subject that has somewhat of a peculiar quality in it, but not in the full extent of that quality; as from the word lanȝ, long, is formed lanȝrum, langsome, or longsome; which does not signify very long, but what has something of length in it, and is not short, but a medium between short and long, for which we have no modern English word. From thence come our English words, delightsome, wholesome, toilsome, fulsome, lonesome, and such like. This word sum comes from the Gothick sums and suma, which signify some, or one." Difference between an Absolute and Limited Monarchy, by Sir J. Fortescue, published with Notes by J. Fortescue-Aland, Esq. 8vo. 1714. p. 20.

Sometimes.† adv. 2. In the example from Bacon, sometimes is mistakenly placed as an adverb; some is there an adjective, agreeing with times; and not one word, as sometimes is.

To SOUGH.* v. n. [soeffen, Teut. spirare.] To whistle: applied to the wind.

A noise like that of a great soughing wind.
Hist. of the Royal Soc. iv. 225.

SPINNY.† In the example from Mortimer, for "early in the ear," read, the year.

SPONSION.† Add,

A mockery, rather than a solemn sponsion, in too many.
Burnet, Hist. of his Own Times, Concl.

SPREAD.† n. s.

1. Add,

Professions of Christianity that have any large spread in the world.
Abp. Usher, Serm. (at the end of his Answ. to the Jesuit,) p. 21.

2. In the example, for "spread that," read, spread like that, &c.

SPRUCE.† Add, as the earliest example,

Another neat in clothes, spruce, full of courtesie.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. Pref. p. 34.

To SPRUCE.* v. a. Add,

Then gan — don Psittaco
To spruce his plumes. More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 39.

To SPRUG.* v. a. To make smart. See SPRAG, and SPRUCE. This word is still used in some places.

They are the very ticklings of nature's heart, that make her sprug up herself in the season of the spring, to court the world with in her best array. Parth. Sacra, (1633,) p. 211.

STEW.† n. s.

2. The example from Shakspeare, placed under this definition by Dr. Johnson, seems to contain a metaphor adopted from the kitchen; and therefore may be rather referred to the fifth sense, of which he had taken no notice.

STIRABOUT.* The S has fallen out at the press.

STYLE.† n. s. 8. In the example, read, to scratch out what was written.

SURMOUNTABLE.† Add,

The author has, by several arguments hardly surmountable, gone a great way to destroy the received opinion.
Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bib. B. 3. ch. 4.

To SWATHE.† Add,

2. To confine.

Who hath swathed in the great and proud ocean, with a girdle of sand, and restrains the waves thereof?
Bp. Hopkins, Expos. p. 276.

SWEDE.* Add, the word is now familiar for a Swedish turnip.

To SY'MPHONIZE.* v. n. [from symphony.] To agree with; to be in unison with.

I mean the Law and the Prophets symphonizing with the Gospel. Boyle, Style of Holy Script. p. 253.

TACT.* n. s. [tactus, Lat.] Touch: an old word, long disused, and of late revived.

Of all creatures, the sense of tact is most exquisite in man, because his body is most temperate; but tact consisteth in the temper of the prime qualities.
Ross, Arc. Microcosm. (1652,) p. 66.

TAG.† n. s. 3. Add, Oftener written teg, in this sense.

To TEMPEST.† v. a. Add,

Tossed and tempested in a most unquiet sea of passions.
Milton, Tetrachordon.

To THRASH.† v. a. 2. Add,

I have been thrash'd, i' faith.
— How? thrash'd, sir? — Never was Shrove-Tuesday bird
So cudgell'd, gentlemen. Beaum. and Fl. Nice Valour.

TRANSFUSIBLE.* Add,

Penetrancy as little transfusible into any other, as the sun's dazzling brightness. Boyle, Style of Holy Script. p. 156.

To TRAIPSE, and To TRAPE.† for v. a. read v. n.

TRIU'NITY.* n. s. State of being triune; the Trinity.

[This] is an undeniable testimony out of this so divinely inspired prophet St. John against all those that would lay aside the person of Christ, and deny his divinity, with the triunity of the Godhead; antiquate his mediatorship; make no distinction betwixt laity and clergy; would pull down churches; with the like wild fanatical professions and intentions. More, Myst. of Godl. p. 203.

To TURMO'IL.* v. n. To be in commotion or unquietness.

Some notable sophister lies sweating and turmoiling under the inevitable and merciless dilemmas of Socrates!
Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

TUSSUCK.† Add,

This is an old word, and explains also the use of tuz; which see.

There shulde not any suche tussockes nor tufts be sene, as there be; nor suche laying out of the heere.
A Moste Faithfull Sermon preached before the Kyng, &c. by Master Hugh Latimer, 1550. sign. C. v.

UNACCOUNTABLE.† 2. Add,

His absolute unaccountable dominion and sovereignty over the creature. South, Serm. vol. viii. S. 11.

UNCA'NDID.* adj. Void of candour. This word is not uncommon in parliamentary debates; but the compiler has not happened to meet with any written authority for it. Mason.

UNGRA'TE.* adj. Not agreeable; displeasing. See GRATE. Obsolete. Swift was perhaps the last who used ungrate for an ungrateful person. Tale of a Tub, § 9.

Impertinent and ungrate must that superstition be.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 46.

GRAMMAR

OF THE

ENGLISH TONGUE,

BY DR. JOHNSON:

WITH NOTES BY THE REV. MR. TODD.

GRAMMAR, which is the art of using words properly, comprises four parts; Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Prosody.

In this division and order of the parts of grammar I follow the common grammarians, without enquiring whether a fitter distribution might not be found. Experience has long shown this method to be so distinct as to obviate confusion, and so comprehensive as to prevent any inconvenient omissions. I likewise use the terms already received, and already understood, though perhaps others more proper might sometimes be invented. Sylburgius, and other innovators, whose new terms have sunk their learning into neglect, have left sufficient warning against the trifling ambition of teaching arts in a new language.

ORTHOGRAPHY is the art of combining letters into syllables, and syllables into words. It therefore teaches previously the form and sound of letters.

The letters of the English language are,

Saxon.		Roman.		Italick.		Old English.		Name.

Z	z	Z	z	Z	z	ℨ	𝔷	zed, more commonly izzard or uzzard, that is s hard.

* [This Saxon letter answers to our th.]

To these may be added certain combinations of letters (a) universally used in printing; as ct, ſt, ſl, fl, ſb, ſk, ff, ſſ, ſi, ſſi, fi, ffi, ffl, and &, or and per se, and, ct, ſt, ſl, ſl, ſb, ſk, ff, ſſ, ſi, ſſi, fi, ffi, ffl, &, 𝔠𝔱, ſ𝔱, ſ𝔩, 𝔣𝔩, 𝔣𝔱, ſſ, ſ𝔦, ſſ𝔦, 𝔣𝔦, 𝔣𝔣𝔦, &.

Our letters are commonly reckoned twenty-four, because anciently i and j, as well as u and v, were expressed by the same character; but as those letters, which had always different powers, have now different forms, our alphabet may be properly said to consist of twenty-six letters.

None of the small consonants have a double form, except ſ, s; of which ſ is (b) used in the beginning and middle, and s at the end.

Vowels are five, a, e, i, o, u.

Such is the number generally received; but for i it is the practice to write y in the end of words, as thy, holy; before i, as from die, dying; from beautify, beautifying; in the words says, days, eyes; and in words derived from the Greek, and written originally with υ, as system, σύςημα, sympathy, συμπαθεια.

For u we often write w after a vowel, to make a diphthong; as raw, grew, view, vow, flowing, lowness.

The sounds of all the letters are various.

In treating on the letters, I shall not, like some other grammarians, enquire into the original of their form as an antiquarian: nor into their formation and prolation by the organs of speech, as a mechanick, anatomist, or physiologist; nor into the properties and gradation of sounds, or the elegance or harshness of particular combinations, as a writer of universal and transcendental grammar. I consider the English alphabet only as it is English; and even in this narrow disquisition I follow the example of former grammarians, perhaps with more reverence than judgment, because by writing in English I suppose my reader already acquainted with the English language; and consequently able to pronounce the letters, of which I teach the pronunciation; and because of sounds in general it may be observed, that words are unable to describe them. An account therefore of the primitive and simple letters is useless almost alike to those who know their sound, and those who know it not.

OF VOWELS.

A.

A has (c) three sounds, the slender, open, and broad.

(a) [This was the constant practice of printing not long since at present the combinations are almost universally disregarded.]
(b) [This double form of s is also now fallen into disuse.]
(c) [See the observations on this letter in the Dictionary.]

A slender is found in most words, as face, mane; and in words ending in ation, as creation, salvation, generation.

The a slender is the proper English a, called very justly by Erpenius, in his Arabick Grammar, a Anglicum cum e mistum, as having a middle sound between the open a and the e. The French have a similar sound in the word pais, and in their e masculine.

A open is the a of the Italian, or nearly resembles it; as father, rather, congratulate, fancy, glass.

A broad resembles the a of the German; as all, wall, call.

Many words pronounced with a broad were anciently written with au, as fault, mault; and we still say fault, vault. This was probably the Saxon sound, for it is yet retained in the northern dialects, and in the rustick pronunciation; as maun for man, haund for hand.

The short a approaches to the a open, as grass.

The long a, if prolonged by e at the end of the word, is always slender, as graze, fame.

A forms a diphthong only with i or y, and u or w, Ai or ay, as in plain, wain, gay, clay, has (d) only the sound of the long and slender a, and differs not in the pronunciation from plane, wane.

Au or aw has the sound of the German a, as raw, naughty.

Ae is sometimes found in Latin words not compleatly naturalised or assimilated, but is no English diphthong; and is more properly expressed by single e, as Cesar, Eneas.

E.

E is the letter which occurs most frequently in the English language.

E is long, as in scēne; or short, as in cĕllar, sĕparate, cĕlebrate, mĕn, thĕn.

It is always short before a double consonant, or two consonants, as in vĕx, pĕrplexity, rĕlent, mĕdlar, rĕptile, sĕrpent, cĕllar, cĕssation, blĕssing, fĕll, fĕlling, dĕbt.

E is always mute at the end of a word, except in monosyllables that have no other vowel, as the; or proper names, as Penelope, Phebe, Derbe; being used to modify the foregoing consonant, as since, once, hedge, oblige; or to lengthen the preceding vowel, as băn, bāne; căn, cāne; pĭn, pīne; tŭn, tūne; rŏb, rōbe; pŏp, pōpe; fĭr, fīre; cŭr, cūre; tŭb, tūbe.

Almost all words which now terminate in consonants ended anciently in e, as year, yeare; wildness, wildnesse; which e probably had the force of the French e feminine, and constituted a syllable with its associate consonant; for, in old editions, words are sometimes divided thus, clea-re, fel-le, knowled-ge. This e was perhaps for a time vocal or silent in poetry as convenience required; but it has been long wholly mute. Camden in his Remains calls it the silent e.

It does not always lengthen the foregoing vowel, as glove, live, give.

It has sometimes in the end of words a sound obscure, and scarcely perceptible, as open, shapen, shotten, thistle, participle, lucre.

This faintness of sound is found when e separates a mute from a liquid, as in rotten; or follows a mute and liquid, as in cattle.

E forms a diphthong with a, as near; with i, as deign, receive; and with u or w, as new, flew.

Ea sounds like e long, as mean; or like ee, as dear, clear, near.

Ei is sounded like e long, as seize, perceiving.

Eu sounds as u long and soft.

E, a, u, are combined in beauty and its derivatives, but have only the sound of u.

E may be said to form a diphthong by reduplication, as agree, sleeping.

Eo is found in yeomen, where it is sounded as e short; and in people, where it is pronounced like ee.

I.

I has a sound, long, as fīne; and short, as fĭn.

That is eminently observable in i, which may be likewise remarked in other letters, that the short sound is not the long sound contracted, but a sound wholly different.

The long sound in monosyllables is always marked by the e final, as thĭn, thīne.

I is often sounded before r as a short u; as flirt, first, shirt.

It forms a diphthong only with e, as field, shield, which is sounded as the double ee; except friend, which is sounded as frĕnd.

I is joined with eu in lieu, and ew in view; which triphthongs are sounded as the open u.

O.

O is long, as bōne, ōbedient, corrōding; or short, as blŏck, knŏck, ŏblique, lŏll.

Women is pronounced wimen.

The short o has sometimes the sound of a close u, as son, come.

O coalesces into a diphthong with a, as moan, groan, approach; oa has the sound of o long.

O is united to e in some words derived from Greek, as œconomy; but oe being not an English diphthong, they are better written as they are sounded, with only e, economy.

With i, as oil, soil, moil, noisome.

This coalition of letters seems to unite the sounds of the two letters as far as two sounds can be united without being destroyed, and therefore approaches more nearly than any combination in our tongue to the notion of a diphthong.

With o, as boot, hoot, cooler; oo has the sound of the Italian u.

With u or w, as our, power, flower; but in some words has only the sound of o long, as in soul, bowl, sow, grow. These different sounds are used to distinguish different significations; as bow, an instrument for shooting; bow, a depression of the head; sow, the she of a boar; sow, to scatter seed; bowl, an orbicular body; bowl, a wooden vessel.

Ou is sometimes pronounced like o soft, as court; sometimes like o short, as cough; sometimes like u close, as could; or u open, as rough, tough; which use only can teach.

Ou is frequently used in the last syllable of words which in Latin end in or, and are made English, as honour, labour, favour, from honor, labor, favor.

Some late innovators have ejected the u, without considering that the last syllable gives the sound neither of or nor ur, but a sound between them, if not compounded of both; besides that they are probably derived to us from the French nouns in eur, as honeur, faveur.

U.

U is long in ūse, confūsion; or short, as ŭs, concŭssion.

It coalesces with a, e, i, o; but has rather in these combinations the force of the w, as quaff, quest, quit,

(d) [In some provinces the ai is yet pronounced by rusticks with the open sound of the monosyllable aye; as in pain, remain, tail, fail, &c. and probably was once more generally prevalent.]

quite, languish; sometimes in ui the i loses its sound, as in juice. It is sometimes mute before a, e, i, y; as guard, guest, guise, buy.

U is followed by e in virtue, but the e has no sound.

Ue is sometimes mute at the end of a word, in imitation of the French, as prorogue, synagogue, plague, vague, harangue.

Y.

Y is a (e) vowel, which, as Quintilian observes of one of the Roman letters, we might want without inconvenience, but that we have it. It supplies the place of i at the end of words, as thy; before an i, as dying; and is commonly retained in derivative words where it was part of a diphthong in the primitive; as destroy, destroyer; betray, betrayed, betrayer; pray, prayer; say, sayer; day, days.

Y being the Saxon vowel ẏ, which was commonly used where i is now put, occurs very frequently in all old books.

General Rules.

A vowel in the beginning or middle syllable, before two consonants, is commonly short, as ŏppŏrtunity.

In monosyllables a single vowel before a single consonant is short, as stag, frog.

Many is pronounced as if it were written manny.

Of CONSONANTS.

B.

B has one unvaried sound, such as it obtains in other languages.

It is mute in debt, debtor, subtle, doubt, lamb, limb, dumb, thumb, climb, comb, womb.

It is used before l and r, as black, brown.

C.

C has before e and i the sound of s; as sincerely, centric, century, circular, cistern, city, siccity: before a, o, and u, it sounds like k, as calm, concavity, copper, incorporate, curiosity, concupiscence.

C might be omitted in the language without loss, since one of its sounds might be supplied by s, and the other by k, but that it preserves to the eye the etymology of words, as face from facies, captive from captivus.

Ch has a sound which is analysed into tsh, as church, chin, crutch. It is the same sound which the Italians give to the c simple before i and e, as citta, cerro.

Ch is sounded like k in words derived from the Greek, as chymist, scheme, choler. Arch is commonly sounded ark before a vowel, as archangel; and with the English sound of ch before a consonant, as archbishop.

Ch, in some French words not yet assimilated, sounds like sh as machine, chaise.

C, having no determinate sound, according to English orthography (f) never ends a word; therefore we write stick, block which were originally sticke, blocke, in such words. C is now mute.

It is used before l and r, as clock, cross.

D.

Is uniform in its sound, as death, diligent.

It is used before r, as draw, dross; and w, as dwell.

F.

F, though having a name beginning with a vowel, it is numbered by the grammarians among the semivowels, yet has this quality of a mute, that it is commodiously sounded before a liquid, as flask, fly, freckle. It has an unvariable sound, except that of is sometimes spoken nearly as ov.

G.

G has two sounds, one hard, as in gay, go, gun; the other soft, as in gem, giant.

At the end of a word it is always hard, ring, snug, song, frog.

Before e and i the sound is uncertain.

G before e is soft, as gem, generation, except in gear, geld, geese, get, gewgaw, and derivatives from words ending in g, as singing, stronger, and generally before er at the end of words, as finger.

G is mute before n, as gnash, sign, foreign.

G before i is (g) hard, as give, except in giant, gigantick, gibbet, gibe, giblets, giles, gill, gilliflower, gin, ginger, gingle, to which may be added Egypt and gypsy.

Gh in the beginning of a word has the sound of the hard g, as ghostly; in the middle, and sometimes at the end, it is quite silent, as though, right, sought, spoken tho', rite, soute.

(e) [See the observation on this letter in the Dictionary, that it is taken erroneously for a consonant; which Ben Jonson also thought. Eng. Gramm. ch. 3.: and the note on y as a consonant in this Grammar.

(f) [Formerly c was not used as a final letter, probably because it was thought doubtful in what manner it should be pronounced in such a situation: this at least is the reason assigned by Dr. Johnson, who retains the final ck in every instance. But I suspect that this orthography was originally established on account of the final e, which anciently followed these letters; as in sticke, blocke, musicke. As long as that vowel retained any sound, its regular effect, without the intervention of k, would have been to soften the c; and even if the c had been doubled, to mark the shortness of the preceding vowel, the latter c would have been softened by e: the only alternative was to write kk, or ck, and the latter was preferred, being moreover a compromise, in most cases, between the sound and the etymology. But the final e has long been silent, and has since been dropped from such terminations: the necessity for the k being thereby removed, that letter has gradually been dropped also: and now, be it right or wrong, domineering custom will have the k omitted, in spite of the remonstrances or protests of grammarians. It is generally agreed to write demoniac, prosaic, music, critic, &c. instead of demoniack, prosaick, musick, critick, &c. Words of one syllable, however, universally retain the ck, as stick sick, &c., and for this reason: where a single letter forms a fourth or fifth part of a whole word, the eye is not easily reconciled to the loss of it. These will, therefore, probably continue to be written as they are at present: but some few larger words, which have held out something longer than their fellows, will perhaps, in time, suffer a similar retrenchment; as arrack, barrack, carrack, frolick, garlick, haddock, bullock, hemlock, hammock, shamrock, cassock, mattock, buttock, puttock. It is observable that the words in ock form the chief part of those which retain the k; and that none which retain it are of a greater length than two syllables. The objection to removing the k from monosyllables, operates in part upon dissyllables; but the very numerous polysyllables in ack and ick, which first invited the innovation, have swept away with them almost all the dissyllables of those forms. There are no polysyllables in ock; whence, I imagine, arises the difference with respect to that form. Words compounded with monosyllables ending in ck preserve that orthography; as candlestick, laughingstock, planetstruck. Nare's Elem. of Orthoepy, p. 91. This is certainly an ingenious illustration of making c a final letter in those words, which analogically require the added k as much as stick, or sick. The k perhaps is not yet so wholly disused as is imagined: nor is it probable, I think, that attac will be used for attack; or ransac for ransack; or even bulloc for bullock. Convenience and expedition have been the causes of "curtailing words" of this kind "of their fair proportion."]

(g) [To the exceptions of g, as hard before i, should be added the words which terminate in ize; as apologize, &c. See also the observations on this letter in the Dictionary.]

It has often at the end the sound of f, as laugh; whence laughter retains the same sound in the middle; cough, trough, sough, tough, enough, slough.

It is not to be doubted, but that in the original pronunciation gh had the force of a consonant, deeply guttural, which is still continued among the Scotch.

G is used before h, l, and r.

H.

H is a note of aspiration, and shews that the following vowel must be pronounced with a strong emission of the breath, as hat, horse.

It seldom begins any but the first syllable, in which it is always sounded with a full breath, except in heir, herb, hostler, honour, humble, honest, humour, and their derivatives.

It sometimes begins middle or final syllables in words compounded, as blockhead; or derived from the Latin, as comprehended.

J.

J consonant sounds uniformly like the soft g, and is therefore a letter useless, except in etymology, as ejaculation, jester, jocund, juice.

K.

K has the sound of hard c, and is used before e and i, where, according to English analogy, c would be soft, as kept, king, skirt, skeptick, for so it should be written, not sceptick, because sc is sounded like s, as in scene.

It is used before n, as knell, knot, but totally loses its sound in modern pronunciation.

K is (h) never doubled; but c is used before it to shorten the vowel by a double consonant, as cŏckle, pickle.

L.

L has in English the same liquid sound as in other languages.

The custom is to double the l at the end of monosyllables, as kill, will, full. These words were originally written kille, wille, fulle; and when the e first grew silent, and was afterwards omitted, the ll was retained, to give force, according to the analogy of our language, to the foregoing vowel.

L is sometimes mute, as in calf, half, halves, calves, could, would, should, psalm, talk, salmon, falcon.

The Saxons, who delighted in guttural sounds, sometimes aspirated the l at the beginning of words, as hlaf, a loaf, or bread; hlaford, a lord; but this pronunciation is now disused.

Le at the end of words is pronounced like a weak el, in which the e is almost mute, as table, shuttle.

M.

M has always the same sound, as murmur, monumental.

N.

N has (i) always the same sound, as noble, manners.

N is sometimes mute after m, as damn, condemn, hymn.

P.

P has always the same sound, which the Welsh and Germans confound with B.

P is sometimes mute, as in psalm, and between m and t, as tempt.

Ph is used for f in words derived from the Greek, as philosopher, philanthropy, Philip.

Q.

Q, as in other languages, is always followed by u, and has a sound which our Saxon ancestors well expressed by cp, cw, as quadrant, queen, equestrian, quilt, enquiry, quire, quotidian. Qu is never followed by u.

Qu is sometimes sounded, in words derived from the French, like k, as conquer, liquor, risque, chequer.

R.

R has the same rough snarling sound as in other tongues.

The Saxons used often to put h before it, as before l at the beginning of words.

Rh is used in words derived from the Greek, as myrrh, myrrhine, catarrhous, rheum, rheumatick, rhyme.

Re, at the end of some words derived from the Latin or French, is pronounced like a weak er, as theatre, sepulchre.

S.

S has a hissing sound, as sibilation, sister.

A single s seldom ends any word, except the third person of verbs, as loves, grows; and the plurals of nouns, as trees, bushes, distresses; the pronouns this, his, ours, yours, us; the adverb thus; and words derived from Latin, as rebus, surplus; the close being always either in se, as house, horse, or in ss, as grass, dress, bliss, less, anciently grasse, dresse.

S single, at the end of words, has a grosser sound, like that of z, as trees, eyes, except this, thus, us, rebus, surplus.

It sounds like z before ion, if a vowel goes before, as intrusion; and like s, if it follows a consonant, as conversion.

It sounds like z before e mute, as refuse, and before y final, as rosy; and in those words, bosom, desire, wisdom, prison, prisoner, présent, present, damsel, casement.

It is the peculiar quality of s, that it may be sounded before all consonants, except x and z, in which s is comprised, x being only ks, and z a hard or gross s. This s is therefore termed by grammarians suæ potestatis litera; the reason of which the learned Dr. Clarke erroneously supposed to be, that in some words it might be doubled at pleasure. Thus we find in several languages:

Σβέννυμι, scatter, sdegno, sdrucciolo, sfavellare, σφίγξ, sgombrare, sgranare, shake, slumber, smell, snipe, space, splendour, spring, squeeze, shrew, step, strength, stramen, stripe, sventura, swell.

S is mute in isle, island, demesne, viscount.

T.

T has its customary sound, as take, temptation.

Ti before a vowel has the sound of si, as salvation, except an s goes before, as question, excepting likewise derivatives from words ending in ty, as mighty, mightier.

Th has two sounds; the one soft, as thus, whether; the other hard, as thing, think. The sound is soft in

---

(h) [Not now; but formerly the duplication of k was usual; as jakke for jack.]

(i) [Mr. Nares follows Wallis in giving two sounds to n, and in defining the difference of these sounds. One is thinner and harder, such as is heard in men, name, &c. which may be called its regular sound, and has been pronounced by Dr. Johnson its invariable one; the other duller, and something guttural, which is heard in king, thank, &c. For the former no rules are necessary: the latter takes place generally before the letters c hard, g hard, k, q, x, and also ch hard; as in uncle, uncle, hang, thank, vinkle, banquet, conquer, phalanx, lynx, anchor, touch. See Elem. of Orth. p. 113.]

these words, then, thence, and there, with their derivatives and compounds; and in that, these, thou, thee, thy, thine, their, they, this, these, them, though, thus, and in all words between two vowels, as father, whether; and between r and a vowel, as burthen.

In other words it is hard, as thick, thunder, faith, faithful. Where it is softened at the end of a word, an e silent must be added, as breath, breathe; cloth, clothe.

V.

V has a sound of near affinity to that of f, vain, vanity.

From f in the Icelandick Alphabet, v is only distinguished by a diacritical point.

W.

Of w, which in diphthongs is often an undoubted vowel, some grammarians have (k) doubted whether it ever be a consonant; and not rather as it is called a double u or ou, as water may be resolved into ouater; but letters of the same sound are always reckoned consonants in other alphabets: and it may be observed, that w follows a vowel without any hiatus or difficulty of utterance, as frosty winter.

Wh has a sound accounted peculiar to the English, which the Saxons better expressed by hp, hw, as what, whence, whiting; in whore only, and sometimes in wholesome, wh is sounded like a simple h.

X.

X begins (l) no English word; it has the sound of ks, as axle, extraneous.

Y.

Y, when it follows a consonant, is a vowel; when it precedes either vowel or diphthong, is a consonant, ye, young. It is thought by some to be in all cases a vowel. But it may be observed of y as of w, that it follows a vowel without any hiatus, as rosy youth.

The chief (m) argument by which w and y appear to be always vowels is, that the sounds which they are supposed to have as consonants, cannot be uttered after a vowel, like that of all other consonants; thus we say, tu, ut; do, odd; but in wed, dew, the two sounds of w have no resemblance of each other.

Z.

Z begins no word originally English; it has the sound, as its name izzard or s hard expresses, of an s uttered with closer compression of the palate by the tongue, as freeze, froze.

In orthography I have supposed orthoepy, or just utterance of words, to be included; orthography being only the art of expressing certain sounds by proper characters. I have therefore observed in what words any of the letters are mute.

Most of the writers of English grammar have given long tables of words pronounced otherwise than they are written, and seem not sufficiently to have considered, that of English, as of all living tongues, there is a double pronunciation, one cursory and colloquial, the other regular and solemn. The cursory pronunciation is always vague and uncertain, being made different in different mouths by negligence, unskilfulness, or affectation. The solemn pronunciation, though by no means immutable and permanent is yet always less remote from the orthography, and less liable to capricious innovation. They have however generally formed their tables according to the cursory speech of those with whom they happened to converse; and concluding that the whole nation combines to vitiate language in one manner, have often established the jargon of the lowest of the people as the model of speech.

For pronunciation the best general rule is, to consider those as the most elegant speakers who deviate least from the written words.

There have been many schemes offered for the emendation and settlement of our orthography, which, like that of other nations, being formed by chance, or according to the fancy of the earliest writers in rude ages, was at first very various and uncertain, and is yet sufficiently irregular. Of these reformers some have endeavoured to accommodate orthography better to the pronunciation, without considering that this is to measure by a shadow, to take that for a model or standard which is changing while they apply it. Others, less absurdly indeed, but with equal unlikelihood of success, have endeavoured to proportion the number of letters to that of sounds, that every sound may have its own character, and every character a single sound. Such would be the orthography of a new language to be formed by a synod of grammarians upon principles of science. But who can hope to prevail on nations to change their practice, and make all their old books useless? or what advantage would a new orthography procure equivalent to the confusion and perplexity of such an alteration?

Some of these schemes I shall however exhibit, which may be used according to the diversities of genius, as a guide to reformers, or terrour to innovators.

One of the first who proposed a scheme of regular orthography, was (n) Sir Thomas Smith, secretary of state to Queen Elizabeth, a man of real learning, and much practised in grammatical disquisitions. Had he written the following lines according to his scheme they would have appeared thus:

> " At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
> The glory of the priesthood, and the shame,
> Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
> And drove those holy Vandals off the stage.
>
> At lengð Erasmus, ðat grët ïnȝurd nâm,
> Δe glorï of ðe prësthûd, and ðe zâm,
> Stemmd ðe wild torrent of a barb'rous âȝ,
> And dröv ðös höli Vandals öff ðe stâȝ."

After him another mode of writing was offered by Dr. Gil, or Gill (o), the celebrated master of St. Paul's school in London;

(k) [See the remark on the letter y.]

(l) [None really English; but attempts have been made to anglicise a few words beginning with x. See the Dictionary.]

(m) [I confess I do not feel the full force of Dr. Johnson's argument; but a consideration of a contrary kind very strongly confirms me in my notion of the matter, namely, that these pretended vowel sounds cannot be uttered at all without the assistance of some vowel. Dwell is a word, but dwll cannot be pronounced; so also cyn, sym, syllables which do occur, must be given up as not to be spoken, unless we give to the y in them the sound of i, or some sound of a different nature from that which it has in youth, &c. It must be owned, on the other hand, that this sound is very nearly allied to a vowel sound, since several vowels take it when rapidly pronounced. The effect of w is heard distinctly enough in the use of the letter q; but without some other vowel besides the attendant u, which seems there to have the power of w, nothing vocal would be formed: qurt, qulity, &c. are words which no one will attempt to utter; so that qu may perhaps be properly considered as a double consonant. We may add a further argument from Dr. Johnson himself; that w and y, as consonants, follow a vowel without any hiatus; as frosty winter, rosy youth. Nares, Elem. of Orthoep. p. 43.]

(n) [His plan was to establish what he called correct writing of English, and the true sounding of the letters and words. This was endeavoured, according to Strype, about the year 1542. " So he framed twenty-nine letters; whereof nineteen were Roman, four Greek, and six English or Saxon. The five vowels he augmented into ten, distinguishing them into long and short; making certain accents over or on the side of them that were to be sounded.—He allowed no diphthongs nor double consonants; nor any e's at the end of words, being not sounded." Strype, Life of Sir T. Smith, p. 27, 28. His alphabet I have given in an Appendix to this Grammar. Not long after Sir Thomas's attempt, Sir John Cheke, who was then called one of the three great masters of the English tongue, (Sir T. Smith and Haddon being the other two,) expressed a wish to reform the orthography. This appears in a letter to Hoby, translator of Castiglione's Courtier, in 1557, at the end of the translation.]

(o) [The work of this learned person is extremely curious. The title is, " Logonomia Anglica, quâ Gentis sermo facilius addiscitur. Con-

which I cannot represent exactly for want of types, but will approach as nearly as I can by means of characters now in use, so as to make it understood, exhibiting two stanzas of Spenser in the reformed orthography. [Dr. Johnson has exhibited a jargon, which the author does not countenance. I have cited the passage as it is in his work, p. 121.]

"Unthankful wretch, said he, is this the meed,
With which her sovereign mercy thou dost quite?
Thy life she saved by her gracious deed;
But thou dost ween with villanous despight,
To blot her honour, and her heav'nly light.
Die, rather die, than so disloyally,
Deem of her high desert, or seem so light.
Fair death it is to shun more shame; then die.
Die, rather die, than ever love disloyally.
"But if to love disloyalty it be,
Shall I then hate her, that from deathes door
Me brought? ah! far be such reproach from me.
What can I less do, than her love therefore,
Sith I her due reward cannot restore?
Die, rather die, and dying do her serve,
Dying her serve, and living her adore.
Thy life she gave, thy life she doth deserve;
Die, rather die, than ever from her service swerve."—

["Unthankful wrech, said hï, iz ðis ðe mïd,
With which her soverain mersi ðou dust quit?
Ðj ljf shï saved bj her gräsius dïd;
But ðou dust mën with vilenus dispjt
Tu blot her onor, *a*nd her hëvnli ljht.
Dj, räðer dj, ðen so disloialj
Dïm of her hjh dezert, or sïm so ljht.
Fäir dêth it iz to shun mör shäm, ðen dj.
Dj, räðer dj, ðen ever luv disloialj.
"But if tu luv disloialtj it bï,
Shal I ðen hät her [ðat] from dëthez dör
Mï brouht? ah far bï such repröch from mï.
What kan I les du ðen her luv ðerför,
Sith I her du reward kannot restör?
Dj, räðer dj, and djing du her serv,
Djing her serv, and living her adör.
Ðj ljf shï gav, ðj ljf shï duth deserv:
Dj, räðer di, ðen ever from her servis swerv."]

Dr. Gill was followed by (p) Charles Butler, a man who did not want an understanding which might have qualified him for better employment. He seems to have been more sanguine than his predecessors, for he printed his book according to his own scheme; which the following specimen will make easily understood.

"But whensoever you have occasion to trouble their patience, or to come among them being troubled, it is better to stand upon your guard, than to trust to their gentleness. For the safeguard of your face, which they have most mind unto, provide a pursehood, made of course boultering, to be drawn and knit about your collar, which for more safety is to be lined against the eminent parts with woollen cloth. First cut a piece about an inch and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by the temples and forehead, from one ear to the other; which being sowed in his place, join unto it two short pieces of the same breadth under the eyes, for the balls of the cheeks, and then set an other piece about the breadth of a shilling against the top of the nose. At other times, when they are not angered, a little piece half a quarter broad, to cover the eyes and parts about them, may serve though it be in the heat of the day."

"Bet pensoëver you hav' occasion to trubble ðeir patienc', or to coom among ðom beeing trubled, it is better to stand upon your gard, ðan to trust to ðeir gentlenes. For ðe saf' gard of your fac', pic ðey hav' most mind' unto, provid' a pursehood, mad' of coorse boultering, to bee drawn and knit about your collar, pio for mor' saf'ty is to bee lined against ð' eminent parts wiτ woollen cloτ. First cut a pecc' about an ino and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reao round by ðe temples and for'head, from one ear to ðe oðer; pio beeing sowed in his plac', join unto it two ʃort peeces of the sam breadτ under ðe eys, for the bals of ðe cheeks, and then set an oðer pecc' about ðe breadτ of a ʃilling against the top of ðe nose. At oðer tim's, pen ðey ar' not angered, a little piec' half a quarter broad, to cover ðe eys and parts about them, may serve ðowg it be in the heat of ðe day." Butler on the Nature and Properties of Bees, 1634.

In the time of Charles I. there was a very prevalent inclination to change the orthography; as appears, among other books, in such editions of the works of Milton as were published by himself. Of these reformers every man had his own scheme; but they agreed in one general design of accommodating the letters to the pronunciation, by ejecting such as they thought superfluous. Some of them would have written these lines thus:

——————All the erth
Shall then be paradis, far happier place
Than this of Eden, and far happier dais.

scripta ab Alexandro Gil, Paulinæ Scholæ Magistro Primario." A second edition of it was published in 1621. It is dedicated to king James; and in the dedication is the following animated passage respecting our language, written in the spirit of a true Englishman. "Edwardus tertius, quo nemo aut rebus gestis clarior extitit, aut prudentiâ illustrior, decrevit, Ne quis Gallicè aut in causis cognoscendis, aut in jure dicundo, loqueretur, (consuetudine jam inde à Wilhelmo Normanno introductâ,) sed ut causarum cognitiones, sententiæ, et cætera acta, Lingua Anglica Latinâve inscriberentur. O si tanti principis curæ par populi amor respondisset! certè nec jurisconsulti illa nomini Anglico injusta servitutis stigmata in hodiernum usque diem ostentarent; nec ab aliis gentibus malè audiret (ut barbara) Lingua Anglica, quâ nulla, audeo dicere, nulla earum quæ nunc mortalibus in usu sunt, aut cultior, aut ornatior, aut ad omnia animi sensa explicanda aptior, aut facundior, invenietur. Obrepsêre, fateor, in scriptione culpæ innumeræ, quibus discentium studia impediuntur: sed repetitis usque ab antiquitate majorum nostrorum characteribus, priorum temporum incuriâ intermissis; eas omnes ita restitui, ut quantumcunque rudis (perceptâ inprimis literarum prosodiâ) verum vocum nostrarum sonum, primo statim intuitu, possit accipere." I have placed his alphabet, as well as Sir Thomas Smith's, as a curiosity, in the Appendix to this Grammar. Dr. Gill notices the endeavours of his knightly predecessor, and of others, in regard to reforming our orthography, in these words. "Occurrere quidem huic vitio viri boni et literati, sed irrito conatu; ex equestri ordine Thomas Smithus, cui volumen benè magnum opposuit Rich. Mulcasterus; qui, post magnam temporis et bonæ chartæ perditionem, omnia consuetudini tanquam tyranno permittenda censet. Unum in equite jure reprehendit, quòd novi ejus characteres nec aspectu grati sunt, nec scriptu faciles. Huic malo, quoad potuit, subvenit è fecialibus unus, qui eorum more ex gradu officii nomen sibi Chester assumpsit. Sed ille, præterquam quòd nonnullas literas ad usum pernecessarias omisit, sermonem nostrum characteribus suis non sequi sed ducere meditabatur. Multa omitto.—Bullokerus, ut paucula mutavit, sic multa fideliter emendavit. Atque hi sunt, quos scio Orthografiæ nomen suum publicè professos esse."—John Hart, Chester herald, published "An Orthographie, &c. how to write or paint the image of mannes voice moste like to the life or nature," in 1569; which is the book, I suppose, that Gill means. Bullokar's "Booke for the Amendment of Orthographie for English Speech" was published in 1580; Mulcaster's, "On the Right Writing of our English Tongue," in 1582. In 1590, a plain "Order of Orthographie" appeared, in the second book of "The Writing Schoolemaster," by Peter Bales; "shewing the perfect method to write true orthographie in our English tongue, as it is now generally printed, used, and allowed, of the best and most learned writers." A sonnet of encouragement to the author, by "Thomas Lodge, gentleman," is prefixed; whose pen, in various compositions, has written many strains of elegance.

"There needs no ivie, where the wine is good;
Nor queint discourse, where judgement leads the pen;
Nor forced praise, where science spreads the sail.
Then, gentle Bales, despise the scoffing brood;
Thy booke hath past the eyes of learned men,
And shall supplie this soyle with sweete availe.
Truth needs no foile, but triumphs in desart:
A wanton flourish never dwells with art."]

(p) [Butler's book is entitled, "The English Grammar, or the Institution of Letters, Syllables, and Words, in the English Tongue. Whereunto is annexed an Index of Words Like and Unlike. By Charles Butler, Magd. Master of Arts, Oxford, 1633." Of Gill he speaks with pleasure, pursuing in some degree his plan; and thus, in his Preface, confidently speaks of the value, and little doubts the admission, of what he offers. "So powerfull is the tyrant custome, opposing and overswaying right and reason; that I doe easily beleeve, this little change, though never so right, reasonable, and profitable, will seeme to some harsh and uuked at the first: but after a while, being a little inured thereunto, I suppose they will rather wonder, how our ancient, eloquent, noble language, in other respects equalizing the best, could so long endure these grosse and disgracefull barbarismes."]

Bishop Wilkins afterwards, in his great work of the philosophical language, proposed, without expecting to be followed, a regular orthography; by which the Lord's prayer is to be written thus:

Yʊr Fádher hʊitsh art in héven, halloed bi dhyi nám, dhyi cingdým cým, dhy ʌill bi dýn in erth as it is in héven, &c.

We have (q) since had no general reformers; but some ingenious men have endeavoured to deserve well of their country, by (r) writing honor and labor for honour and labour, red for *read in the preter-tense, sais for says, repete for repeat, explane for explain, or declame for declaim. Of these it may be said, that as they have done no good, they have done little harm; both because they have innovated little, and because few have followed them.

The English language has properly no dialects: the style of writers has no professed diversity in the use of words, or of their flexions, and terminations, nor differs but by different degrees of skill or care. The oral diction is uniform in no spacious country, but has less variation in England than in most other nations of equal extent. The language of the northern counties retains many words now out of use, but which are commonly of the genuine Teutonick race, and is uttered with a pronunciation which now seems harsh and rough, but was probably used by our ancestors. The northern speech is therefore not barbarous but obsolete. The speech in the western provinces seems to differ from the general diction rather by a depraved pronunciation, than by any real difference which letters would express.

ETYMOLOGY.

ETYMOLOGY teaches the deduction of one word from another, and the various modifications by which the sense of the same word is diversified; as horse, horses; I love, I loved.

Of the Article.

The English have two articles, an or a, and the.

(q) [This is a great mistake. Dr. Johnson knew not of the volume called "Ars Signorum, vulgò Character Universalis et Lingua Philosophica, quâ poterunt homines diversissimorum idiomatum, spatio duarum septimanarum, omnia animi sua sensa in rebus familiaribus non minus intelligibiliter, sive scribendo, sive loquendo, mutuò communicare, quam linguis propriis vernaculis, &c." Lond. 1661. The author of this work is George Dalgarno, whom bishop Wilkins himself and other learned men countenanced. His project, though now forgotten, is extremely ingenious; and for the adoption of it the strongest reasons, which it is possible to urge, have been offered. It received indeed both academical and the highest publick sanction. And the following Proclamation, which precedes the work, will confirm what I have said.

"CHARLES R.

"Whereas we have been informed by the testimonies of divers learned men from both the universities of our kingdom of England, (R. Love, DD. J. Wilkins, DD. J. Wallis, DD. S. Ward, DD. W. Dillingham, DD.) concerning the great pains taken by George Dalgarno, in a scholastick and literary design of an Universal Character and Philosophical Character; all of them approving and commending his discovery, judging it to be of singular use for the facilitating the matter of communication and intercourse between people of different languages, and consequently a proper and effectual means for advancing all the parts of real and useful knowledge, civilizing barbarous nations, propagating the gospel, and encreasing traffique and commerce: We understanding moreover, by certificates from several credible persons, that through the various vicissitudes of Providence he hath suffered the loss of a considerable estate, by reason whereof he is wholly disinabled from affording that charge and expence for the effectual prosecuting of this work, as the nature of it requires: We therefore out of a tender consideration of the premises, and for manifesting our good will and affection towards the promoting of art and the encouraging all such ingenious persons of our subjects who shall attempt and effect any thing tending to publike good; as We do declare, that We will Ourselves express some token of Our Royal Favour for the helping forward this so laudable and hopeful enterprize; so also, reflecting upon its common and universal usefulness, We do, by these our Letters of Recommendation, incite as many of our subjects (especially the reverend and learned clergy) as are truly apprehensive and sensible of the defectiveness of art chiefly in this particular of language; what great loss mankind is at therethrough; how acceptable it will be before God, and praise-worthy among men, to encourage and advance those waies of learning wherein the general good of mankind is intended; that such would, as their affections shall encline them and their places enable them, put their helping hands to the bringing forth this (as yet) infant-design, now sticking in the birth. This will give just cause to Our posterity through succeeding generations, while they are reaping the fruit of Our ingeny and industry, to look back upon Us with reverence: And from Our example they will be provoked not to rest upon what they shall have received from us, but still to be endeavouring to proceed in a further repairing the decayes of nature, untill art have done its last, or, which is more probable, nature cease to be, or be renewed.

"Given at our Court at Whitehal this 26th of November, in the 12th year of Our Reign."

(r) [It is surprising, that Dr. Johnson should have been a stranger to "Friendly Advice to the Correctour of the English Press at Oxford concerning the English Orthographie." fol. Lond. 1682. It exhibits the very forms which Dr Johnson, in opposition to most modern writers, adopts and vindicates; and it would have abundantly pleased him, as the following citations from it will shew. The work is moreover curious, as it points out the time when the final k, in all our words, (for which Johnson strenuously contends,) was first systematically disregarded, and the books in which the innovation commenced.

"I confess I am not much versed in the English prints at Oxford. I have only seen a Bible in quarto there printed; but never read one page in it, as being unwilling to read so sacred a volume, where I should be sure to meet with many errours, though but grammatical. But I have been told by a principal bookseller in London, that men would not buy that impression for your heterodox spelling found therein. I am better acquainted with two other books printed at Oxford; the one named the The Ladies Calling, the other The Government of the Tongue: in which I do not pretend to instance in half the cacographies there found, but such few as the entrance into them offers to every eye." p. 5. The writer presently observes, "Now am I to touch your alteration by way of defect: and first, in the middle of words, where first I note your great spite or skill against dipthongs, generally turning words derived from the Latine into the Latine tongue again: as editor (intended for an English word but spoiled in the making) for editour; and writing color for colour; and humor for humour. And the vein being on you, you could not stop there, but venture to do the like to words properly English; as neighbor for neighbour, and mold for mould." p. 6. "I come next to shew how you have injuriously and shamefully docked English words, by taking from the end of them:—as, for example, writing diabolic, topic, stomac, public, instead of the known words diabolick, topick, publick; or, as sometimes they were written, diabolique, topique, publique; but never, but from Oxford, with a c terminating them: unless from France, where I find them so spelt: But what have we to do to conforme our English to their language?—But being almost as much tired in writing, as I may suppose you may be in reading this, I shall only mention your masterpiece of refining or reforming our language, in constant writing tho for though, and thro for through, in The Government of the Tongue! Being but parts of words, they can signify nothing at all, standing by themselves." pp. 7, 8.

The ambition to change our orthography, in those instances which Dr. Johnson has noticed and which might be enlarged, strongly possessed the late bishop Newton and Benson the commentator on the epistles of St. Paul. No general reformer, however, appeared till about the year 1791, when Mr. James Elphinston, a man of considerable learning, attempted to represent in the spelling the sounds pronounced, and published in several volumes the specimens of a system vainly raised to overturn the whole form of the language.

The orthography of numerous words is certainly still unsettled. But custom, to the tyranny of which Dr. Gill and Charles Butler (as we have seen) disdained to bow, will be obeyed. Custom is against the final k of Johnson and our ancestors; custom rejects the u from his authour, and terrour, and superiour, though not generally from labour, honour, and favour; custom is more in favour of ancient than antient; custom omits the e in judgement, in abridgement, and in acknowledgement, while in arrangement, in management, in enlargement, in revengement, in changeable, in encouragement, in allegement, it has not dared to hazard the improper omission; custom prefers vicious to vitious, enlarge to inlarge, negociate to negotiate. The rules of grammarians, and the analogy of language, however just and indisputable, custom overleaps without thought; and is maintained in its usurpation without enquiry.]

An, a.

A has an indefinite signification, and means one, with some reference to more; as, This is a good book, that is, one among the books that are good. He was killed by a sword, that is, some sword. This is a better book for a man than a boy, that is, for one of those that are men than one of those that are boys. An army might enter without resistance, that is, any army.

In the senses in which we use a or an in the singular, we speak in the plural without an article; as, these are good books.

I have made an the original article, because it is only the Saxon an, or æn, one, applied to a new use, as the German ein, and the French un; the n being cut off before a consonant in the speed of utterance.

Grammarians of the last age direct, that an should be used before h; whence it appears that the English anciently aspirated less. An is still used before the silent h, as an herb, an honest man: but otherwise a; as,

A horse, a horse, my kingdom for a horse.
Shakspeare.

An or a can only be joined with a singular, the correspondent plural is the noun without an article, as I want a pen, I want pens: or with the pronominal adjective some, as I want some pens.

The has a particular and definite signification.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world. Milton.

That is, that particular fruit, and this world in which we live. So He giveth fodder for the cattle, and green herbs for the use of man; that is, for those beings that are cattle, and his use that is man.

The is used in both numbers.

I am as free as Nature first made man,
Ere the base laws of servitude began,
When wild in woods the noble savage ran. } Dryden.

Many words are used without articles; as

1. Proper names, as John, Alexander, Longinus, Aristarchus, Jerusalem, Athens, Rome, London. God is used as a proper name.

2. Abstract names, as blackness, witchcraft, virtue, vice, beauty, ugliness, love, hatred, anger, goodnature, kindness.

3. Words in which nothing but the mere being of any thing is implied: This is not beer, but water; This is not brass, but steel.

Of Nouns Substantive.

The relations of English nouns to words going before or following are not expressed by cases, or changes of termination, but as in most of the other European languages by prepositions, unless we may be said to have a genitive case.

Singular.

Nom.	Magister,	a Master, the Master.
Gen.	Magistri,	of a Master, of the Master, or Masters, the Masters.
Dat.	Magistro,	to a Master, to the Master.
Acc.	Magistrum,	a Master, the Master.
Voc.	Magister,	Master, O Master.
Abl.	Magistro,	from a Master, from the Master.

Plural.

Nom.	Magistri,	Masters, the Masters.
Gen.	Magistrorum,	of Masters, of the Masters.
Dat.	Magistris,	to Masters, to the Masters.
Acc.	Magistros,	Masters, the Masters.
Voc.	Magistri,	Masters, O Masters.
Abl.	Magistris,	from Masters, from the Masters.

Our nouns are therefore only declined thus:

Master,	Gen. Masters.	Plur. Masters.
Scholar,	Gen. Scholars.	Plur. Scholars.

These genitives are always written with a mark of elision, master's, scholar's, according to an opinion long received, that the 's is a contraction of his, as the soldier's valour, for the soldier his valour; but this cannot be the true original, because 's is put to female nouns, Woman's beauty; the Virgin's delicacy; Haughty Juno's unrelenting hate; and collective nouns, as Women's passions; the rabble's insolence; the multitude's folly; in all these cases it is apparent that his cannot be understood. We say likewise the foundation's strength, the diamond's lustre, the winter's severity; but in these cases his may be understood, he and his having formerly been applied to neuters in the place now supplied by it and its.

The learned and sagacious Wallis, to whom every English grammarian owes a tribute of reverence, calls this modification of the noun an adjective possessive; I think with no more propriety than he might have applied the same to the genitive in equitum decus, Trojæ oris, or any other Latin genitive. Dr. Lowth, on the other part, supposes the possessive pronouns mine and thine to be genitive cases.

This termination of the noun seems to constitute a real genitive indicating possession. It is derived to us from those who declined ſmið, a smith; Gen. ſmiðer, of a smith; Plur. ſmiðer, or ſmiðar, smiths; and so in two other of their seven declensions.

It is a further confirmation of this opinion, that in the old poets both the genitive and plural were longer by a syllable than the original word; knitis, for knight's, in Chaucer; leavis, for leaves, in Spenser.

When a word ends in s, the genitive may be the (s) same with the nominative, as Venus temple.

The plural is formed by adding s, as table, tables; fly, flies; sister, sisters; wood, woods; or es where s could not otherwise be sounded, as after ch, s, sh, x, z; after c sounded like s, and g like j; the mute e is vocal before s, as lance, lances, outrage, outrages.

The formation of the plural and genitive singular is the same.

A few words yet make the plural in n, as men, women, oxen, swine, and more anciently eyen and shoon. This formation is that which generally prevails in the Teutonick dialects.

Words that end in f commonly form their plural by ves, as loaf, loaves; calf, calves.

Except a few, muff, muffs; chief, chiefs. So hoof, roof, proof, relief, mischief, puff, cuff, dwarf, handkerchief, grief.

Irregular plurals are teeth from tooth, lice from louse, mice from mouse, geese from goose, feet from foot, dice from die, pence from penny, brethren from brother, children from child.

(s) [The e, however, for the sake of distinction, should be, and I think generally is, used; as Venus' temple, others' good, &c.]

Plurals ending in s have for the most part no genitives; but we say, Womens excellencies, and Weigh the mens wits against the ladies hairs. Pope.

Dr. Wallis thinks the Lords' house may be said for the house of Lords; but such phrases are not now in use; and surely an English ear rebels against them. They would commonly produce a troublesome ambiguity, as the Lord's house may be the house of Lords, or the house of a Lord. Besides that the mark of elision is improper, for in the Lords' house nothing is cut off.

Some English substantives, like those of many other languages, change their termination as they express different sexes, as prince, princess; actor, actress; lion, lioness; hero, heroine. To these mentioned by Dr. Lowth may be added arbitress, poetess, chauntress, duchess, tigress, governess, tutress, peeress, authoress, traitress, and perhaps others. Of these variable terminations we have only a sufficient number to make us feel our want, for when we say of a woman that she is a philosopher, an astronomer, a builder, a weaver, a dancer, we perceive an impropriety in the termination which we cannot avoid; but we can say that she is an architect, a botanist, a student, because these terminations have not annexed to them the notion of sex. In words which the necessities of life are often requiring, the sex is distinguished not by different terminations, but by different names, as a bull, a cow; a horse, a mare; equus, equa; a cock, a hen; and sometimes by pronouns prefixed, as a he-goat, a she-goat.

Of Adjectives.

Adjectives in the English language are wholly indeclinable; having neither case, gender, nor number, and being added to substantives in all relations without any change; as, a good woman, good women, of a good woman; a good man, good men, of good men.

The Comparison of Adjectives.

The (t) comparative degree of adjectives is formed by adding er, the superlative by adding est, to the positive; as fair, fair*er*, fair*est; lovely*, loveli*er*, loveli*est; sweet*, sweet*er*, sweet*est; low*, lower, low*est; high*, high*er*, high*est*.

Some words are irregularly compared; as good, better, best; bad, worse, worst; little, less, least; near, nearer, next; much, more, most; many (or moe), more (for moer), most (for moest); late, latter, latest or last.

Some comparatives form a superlative by adding most, as nether, nethermost; outer, outmost; under, undermost; up, upper, uppermost; fore, former, foremost.

Most is sometimes added to a substantive, as topmost, southmost.

Many adjectives do not admit of comparison by terminations, and are only compared by more and most, as benevolent, more benevolent, most benevolent.

All adjectives may be compared by (u) more and most, even when they have comparatives and superlatives regularly formed; as fair, fairer, or more fair; fairest, or most fair.

In adjectives that admit a regular comparison, the comparative more is oftener used than the superlative most, as more fair, is oftener written for fairer, than most fair for fairest.

The comparison of adjectives is very uncertain; and being much regulated by commodiousness of utterance, or agreeableness of sound, is not easily reduced to rules.

Monosyllables are commonly compared.

Polysyllables, or words of more than two syllables, are seldom compared otherwise than by more and most, as deplorable, more deplorable, most deplorable.

Dissyllables are seldom compared if they terminate in some, as fulsome, toilsome; in ful, as careful, spleenful, dreadful; in ing as trifling, charming; in ous, as porous; in less, as careless, harmless; in ed, as wretched; in id, as candid; in al, as mortal; in ent, as recent, fervent; in ain, as certain; in ive, as missive; in dy, as woody; in fy, as puffy; in ky, as rocky, except lucky; in my, as roomy; in ny, as skinny; in py, as ropy, except happy; in ry, as hoary.

Some comparatives and superlatives are yet found in good writers formed without regard to the foregoing rules; but in a language subjected so little and so lately to grammar, such anomalies must frequently occur.

So shady is compared by Milton.

She in shadiest covert hid,
Tun'd her nocturnal note. Parad. Lost.

And virtuous.

What she wills to say or do,
Seems wisest, virtuousest, discreetest, best. Parad. Lost.

So trifling, by Ray, who is indeed of no great authority.

It is not so decorous, in respect of God, that he should immediately do all the meanest and triflingest things himself, without making use of any inferior or subordinate minister. Ray on the Creation.

Famous, by Milton.

I shall be named among the famousest
Of women, sung at solemn festivals. Milton's Agonistes.

Inventive, by Ascham.

Those have the inventivest heads for all purposes, and roundest tongues in all matters. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Mortal, by Bacon.

The mortalest poisons practised by the West Indians, have some mixture of the blood, fat, or flesh of man. Bacon.

Natural, by Wotton.

I will now deliver a few of the properest and naturallest considerations that belong to this piece. Wotton's Architecture.

Wretched, by Jonson.

The wretcheder are the contemners of all helps; such as presuming on their own naturals, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they understand not things. Ben Jonson.

Powerful, by Milton.

We have sustain'd one day in doubtful fight,
What heav'n's great King hath pow'rfullest to send Against us from about his throne. Paradise Lost.

The termination in ish may be accounted in some sort a degree of comparison, by which the signification is diminished below the positive, as black, blackish, or tending to blackness; salt, saltish, or having a little taste of salt: they therefore admit no comparison. This termination is seldom added but to words expressing sensible qualities, nor often to words of above one syllable, and is scarcely in use in the solemn or sublime style.

Of Pronouns.

Pronouns, in the English language are, I, thou, he, with their plurals we, ye, they; it, who, which, what, whether, whosoever, whatsoever, my, mine, our, ours, thy, thine, your, yours, his, her, hers, their, theirs, this, that, other, another, the same, some.

(t) [This addition of er is purely Saxon; in which language eꞃ, eꞃe, aꞃ, æꞃe, iꞃ, oꞃ, and ẏꞃ, are forms of the comparative degree; as eꞅꞇ, aꞅꞇ, æꞅꞇ, oꞅꞇ, uꞅꞇ, and ẏꞅꞇ, are of the superlative.]

(u) [Formerly a double degree of comparison was used, however ungrammatical it may seem, and however harsh it may sound; as most basest by Sir Thomas More; most affablest by Ben Jonson; most straitest, Acts, xxvi. 5.; more braver by Shakspeare. We retain Most Highest as distinctly and justly applicable to the Creator of heaven and earth.]

The Pronouns personal are irregularly inflected.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	I	We
Accus. and other oblique cases.	Me	Us
Nom.	Thou	Ye
Oblique.	Thee	You

You is commonly used in modern writers for ye, particularly in the language of ceremony, where the second person plural is used for the second person singular, You are my friend.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	He	They	Applied to masculines.
Oblique.	Him	Them
Nom.	She	They	Applied to feminines.
Oblique.	Her	Them
Nom.	It	They	Applied to neuters or things.
Oblique.	Its	Them

For it the practice of ancient writers was to use he, and for its, his.

The possessive pronouns, like other adjectives, are without cases or change of termination.

The possessive of the first person is my, mine, our, ours; of the second, thy, thine, your, yours; of the third, from he, his, from she, her, and hers, and in the plural their, theirs, for both sexes.

Our, yours, hers, theirs, are used when the substantive preceding is separated by a verb, as These are our books. These books are ours. Your children excel ours in stature, but ours surpass yours in learning.

(v) Ours, yours, hers, theirs, notwithstanding their seeming plural termination, are applied equally to singular and plural substantives, as This book is ours. These books are ours.

Mine and thine were formerly used before a vowel, as mine amiable lady; which though now disused in prose, might be still properly continued in poetry, they are used as ours and yours, and are referred to a substantive preceding, as thy house is larger than mine, but my garden is more spacious than thine.

Their and theirs are the possessives likewise of they, when they is the plural of it, and are therefore applied to things.

Pronouns relative are who, which, what, whether, whosoever, whatsoever.

Sing. and Plur.		Sing. and Plur.

Gen.	Whose	Gen.	Of which, or whose
Other oblique cases.	Whom	Other oblique cases.	Which.

Who is now used in relation to persons, and which in relation to things; but they were anciently confounded. At least it was common to say, the man which, though I remember no example of, the thing who.

Whose is rather the poetical than regular genitive of which:

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world. Milton.

Whether is only used in the nominative and accusative cases; and has no plural, being applied only to one of a number, commonly to one of two, as, Whether of these is left I know not. Whether shall I choose? It is now almost obsolete.

What, whether relative or interrogative, is without variation.

Whosoever, whatsoever, being compounded of who or what, and soever, follow the rule of their primitives.

	Singular.	Plural.
In all cases,	This	These
	That	Those
	Other	Others
	Whether

The plural (w) others is not used but when it is referred to a substantive preceding, as I have sent other horses. I have not sent the same horses, but others.

Another, being only an other, has no plural. (x)

Here, there, and where, joined with certain particles, have a relative and pronominal use. Hereof, herein, hereby, hereafter, herewith, thereof, therein, thereby, thereupon, therewith, whereof, wherein, whereby, whereupon, wherewith, which signify, of this, in this, &c. of that, in that, &c. of which, in which, &c.

Therefore and wherefore, which are properly there for and where for, for that, for which, are now reckoned conjunctions, and continued in use. The rest seem to be passing by degrees into neglect, though proper, useful, and analogous. They are referred both to singular and plural antecedents.

There are two more words used only in conjunction with pronouns, own and self.

Own is added to possessives, both singular and plural, as my own hand, our own house. It is emphatical, and implies a silent contrariety or opposition; as, I live in my own house, that is, not in a hired house. This I did with my own hand, that is, without help, or not by proxy.

Self is added to possessives, as myself, yourselves; and sometimes to personal pronouns, as himself, itself, themselves. It then, like own, expresses emphasis and opposition, as I did this myself, that is, not another; or it forms a reciprocal pronoun, as We hurt ourselves by vain rage.

Himself, itself, themselves, is supposed by Wallis to be put by corruption, for his self, it self, their selves; so that self is always a substantive. This seems justly observed, for we say, He came himself; Himself shall do this; where (y) himself cannot be an accusative.

Of the VERB.

English verbs are (z) active, as I love; or neuter, as I languish. The neuters are formed like the actives.

(v) [Dr. Johnson omits the apostrophe generally used; as our's, your's, &c. There seems indeed to have been no necessity for the added s; our, your, &c. including in themselves the idea of property or possession.]

(w) [Anciently other was the plural: "They are taken out of the way, as all other." Job, xxiv. 24. "And leave their riches for other." Ps. Comm. Pr. xlix. 10.]

(x) [Each and either are placed in the Dictionary by Dr. Johnson as pronouns; but are here omitted. They are distributive pronouns, because they relate to persons or things that make up a number; the former including every individual of any number referred to; the latter, implying one or the other, and is opposed to neither; which also is a pronoun here unnoticed, and means not either. Some have therefore considered none, i. e. not one, as a negative pronoun, which Dr. Johnson pronounces an adjective; and formerly none was prefixed where now we use no.]

(y) [Himself, thus used, is certainly not proper. The Saxons used heryip, i. e. he himself.]

(z) [Neuter verbs denote an action in the agent: active verbs denote an action on an object. The former require no accusative case after them; the latter absolutely require it, either expressed or understood.]

Most verbs signifying action may likewise signify condition or habit, and become neuters, as I love, I am in love; I strike, I am now striking.

Verbs have only two tenses inflected in their terminations, the present, and simple preterite: the other tenses are compounded of the auxiliary verbs have, shall, will, let, may, can, and the infinitive of the active or neuter verb.

The passive voice is formed by joining the participle preterite to the substantive verb, as I am loved.

To have. Indicative Mood.

Present Tense.

Sing. I have; thou hast; he hath or has;
Plur. We have; ye have; they have.

Has is a termination corrupted from hath, but now more frequently used both in verse and prose.

Simple Preterite.

Sing. I had; thou hadst; he had;
Plur. We had; ye had; they had.

Compound Preterite.

Sing. I have had; thou hast had; he has or hath had;
Plur. We have had; ye have had; they have had.

Preterpluperfect.

Sing. I had had; thou hadst had; he had had;
Plur. We had had; ye had had; they had had.

Future.

Sing. I shall have; thou shalt have; he shall have;
Plur. We shall have; ye shall have; they shall have.

Second Future.

Sing. I will have; thou wilt have; he will have;
Plur. We will have; ye will have; they will have.

By reading these future tenses may be observed the variations of shall and will.

Imperative Mood.

Sing. Have, or have thou; let him have;
Plur. Let us have; have, or have ye; let them have.

Conjunctive Mood.

Present.

Sing. I have; thou have; he have;
Plur. We have; ye have; they have.

Preterite simple as in the Indicative.

Preterite compound.

Sing. I have had; they have had; he have had;
Plur. We have had; ye have had; they have had.

Future.

Sing. I shall have; as in the Indicative.

Second Future.

Sing. I shall have had; thou shalt have had; he shall have had;
Plur. We shall have had; ye shall have had; they shall have had.

Potential.

The potential form of speaking is expressed by may, can, in the present; and might, could, or should in the preterite, joined with the infinitive mood of the verb.

Present.

Sing. I may have; thou mayst have; he may have;
Plur. We may have; ye may have; they may have.

Preterite.

Sing. I might have; thou mightst have; he might have;
Plur. We might have; ye might have; they might have.

Present.

Sing. I can have; thou canst have; he can have;
Plur. We can have; ye can have; they can have.

Preterite.

Sing. I could have; thou couldst have; he could have;
Plur. We could have; ye could have; they could have.

In like manner should is united to the verb.

There is likewise a double Preterite.

Sing. I should have had; thou shouldst have had; he should have had;
Plur. We should have had; ye should have had; they should have had.

In like manner we use, I might have had; I could have had, &c.

Infinitive Mood.

Present. (a) To have. Preterite. To have had.
Participle present. Having. Participle preter. Had.

Verb Active. To Love.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I love; thou lovest; he loveth, or loves;
Plur. We love; ye love; they love.

Preterite simple.

Sing. I loved; thou lovedst; he loved;
Plur. We loved; ye loved; they loved.

Preterperfect compared. I have loved, &c.
Preterpluperfect. I had loved, &c.
Future. I shall love, &c. I will love, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Love, or love thou; let him love;
Plur. Let us love; love, or love ye; let them love.

(a) [The preposition to, [in Dutch written toe and tot, a little nearer to the original,] is the Gothic substantive taui, or tauhts, i. e. act, effect, result, consummation. Which Gothic substantive is indeed itself no other than the past participle tauid, or tauids, of the verb taujan, agere. And what is done, is terminated, ended, finished. In the Teutonic, this verb is written tuan or tuon, whence the modern German thun, and its preposition, varying like its verb, tu. In the Anglo-Saxon the verb is teogan, and preposition to. After this derivation, it will not appear in the least mysterious, or wonderful, that we should, in a peculiar manner, in English, prefix this same word to to the infinitive of our verbs. For the verbs in English not being distinguished, as in other languages, by a peculiar termination; and it being sometimes impossible to distinguish them by their place, when the old termination of the Anglo-Saxon verbs was dropped, this word to, i. e. act, became necessary to be prefixed, in order to distinguish them from nouns, and to invest them with the verbal character: for there is no difference between the noun love, and the verb to love, but what must be comprized in the prefix to. The infinitive, therefore, appears plainly to be, what the Stoics called it, the very verb itself. Mr. Horne Tooke, Div. of Purley, i. 350.]

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I love; thou love; he love;
Plur. We love; ye love; they love.
Preterite simple, as in the Indicative.
Preterite compound. I have loved, &c.
Future. I shall love, &c.
Second Future. I shall have loved, &c.

Potential.

Present. I may or can love, &c.
Preterite. I might, could, or should love, &c.
Double Pret. I might, could, or should have loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To love. Preterite. To have loved.
Participle present. Loving. Participle past. Loved.

The passive is formed by the addition of the participle preterite, to the different tenses of the verb to be, which must therefore be here exhibited.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. (b) I am; thou art; he is;
Plur. We are, or be; ye are, or be; they are, or be.

The plural be is now little in use.

Preterite.

Sing. (c) I was; thou wast or wert; he was;
Plur. We were; ye were; they were.

Wert is properly of the conjunctive mood, and ought not to be used in the indicative.

Preterite compound. I have been, &c.
Preterpluperfect. I had been, &c.
Future. I shall or will be, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Be thou; let him be;
Plur. Let us be; be ye; let them be.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I be; thou beest; he be;
Plur. We be; ye be; they be.

Preterite.

Sing. I were; thou wert; he were;
Plur. We were; ye were; they were.
Preterite compound. I have been, &c.
Future. I shall have been, &c.

Potential.

I may or can; would, could, or should be; could, would, or should have been, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To be. Preterite. To have been.
Participle pres. Being. Participle preter. Having been.

Passive Voice. Indicative Mood.

I am loved, &c. I was loved, &c. I have been loved, &c.

Conjunctive Mood.

If I be loved, &c. If I were loved, &c. If I shall have been loved, &c.

Potential Mood.

I may or can be loved, &c. I might, could, or should be loved, &c. I might, could, or should have been loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To be loved. Preterite. To have been loved.
Participle. Loved.

There is another form of English verbs, in which the infinitive mood is joined to the verb do in its various inflections, which are therefore to be learned in this place.

To Do.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I do; thou dost; he doth;
Plur. We do; ye do; they do.

Preterite.

Sing. I did; thou didst; he did;
Plur. We did; ye did; they did.
Preterite, &c. I have done, &c. I had done, &c.
Future. I shall or will do, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Do thou; let him do;
Plur. Let us do; do ye; let them do.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I do; thou do; he do;
Plur. We do; ye do; they do.

The rest are as in the indicative.

Infinitive. To do; to have done.
Participle pres. Doing. Participle preter. Done.

Do is sometimes used superfluously, as, I do love, I did love: simply for I love, or I loved; but this is considered as a vitious mode of speech.

It is sometimes used emphatically; as,

> I do love thee, and when I love thee not,
> Chaos is come again. Shakespeare.

It is frequently joined with a negative; as, I like her, but I do not love her; I wished him success, but did not help him. This, by custom at least, appears more easy, than the other form of expressing the same sense by a negative adverb after the verb, I like her, but love her not.

The Imperative prohibitory is seldom applied in the second person, at least in prose, without the word do; as, Stop him, but do not hurt him; Praise beauty, but do not dote on it.

Its chief use is in interrogative forms of speech, in which it is used through all the persons; as, Do I live? Dost thou strike me? Do they rebel? Did

(b) [Formerly, in the singular as well as plural, be was used; of which usage Shakspeare and Ben Jonson furnish proofs. But, like the plural be, it is now rarely employed, except by rusticks.]

(c) [It is ungrammatical to say or to write you was; yet some of our best writers have occasionally committed this mistake. Was belongs to the first and third persons singular, I was, he was; and therefore cannot properly be joined to the second person plural: it would be just as correct to use you is for you are, as you was for you were; which the most vulgar only would utter.]

I complain? Didst thou love her? Did she die? So likewise in negative interrogations; Do I not yet grieve? Did she not die?

Do and did are thus used only for the present and simple preterite.

There is another manner of conjugating neuter verbs, which, when it is used, may not improperly denominate them neuter passives, as they are inflected according to the passive form by the help of the verb substantive to be. They answer nearly to the reciprocal verbs in French; as,

I am risen, surrexi, Latin; Je me suis levé, French.
I was walked out, exieram; Je m'étois promené.

In like manner we commonly express the present tense; as, I am going, eo. I am grieving, doleo. She is dying, illa moritur. The tempest is raging, furit procella. I am pursuing an enemy, hostem insequor. So the other tenses, as, We were walking, ἐτυγχάνομεν περιπατοῦντες, I have been walking, I had been walking, I shall or will be walking.

There is another manner of using the active participle, which gives it a passive signification; as, The grammar is now printing, grammatica jam nunc chartis imprimitur. The brass is forging, æra excuduntur. This is, in my opinion a vitious expression, probably corrupted from a phrase more pure, but now somewhat obsolete: The book is a printing, The brass is a forging; a being properly at, and printing and forging verbal nouns signifying action, according to the analogy of this language.

The indicative and conjunctive moods are by modern writers frequently confounded, or rather the conjunctive is wholly neglected, when some convenience of versification does not invite its revival. It is used among the purer writers of former times after if, though, ere, before, till or until, whether, except, unless, whatsoever, whomsoever, and words of wishing; as, Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not.

Of Irregular Verbs.

The English verbs were divided by Ben Jonson into four conjugations, without any reason arising from the nature of the language, which has properly but one conjugation, such as has been exemplified; from which all deviations are to be considered as anomalies, which are indeed in our monosyllable Saxon verbs and the verbs derived from them very frequent; but almost all the verbs which have been adopted from other languages, follow the regular form.

Our verbs are observed by Dr. Wallis to be irregular only in the formation of the preterite, and its participle. Indeed, in the scantiness of our conjugations, there is scarcely any other place for irregularity.

The first irregularity, is a slight deviation from the regular form, by rapid utterance or poetical contraction: the last syllable ed is often joined with the former by suppression of e; as, lov'd for loved; after c, ch, sh, f, k, x, and after the consonants s, th, when more strongly pronounced, and sometimes after m, n, r, if preceded by a short vowel, t is used in pronunciation, but very seldom in writing, rather than d; as plac't, snatch't, fish't, wak't, dwel't, smel't; for plac'd, snatch'd, fish'd, wak'd, dwel'd, smel'd; or placed, snatched, fished, waked, dwelled, smelled.

Those words which terminate in l or ll, or p, make their preterite in t, even in solemn language; as crept, felt, dwelt; sometimes after x, ed is changed into t; as, vext: this is not constant.

A long vowel is often changed into a short one; thus, kept, slept, wept, crept, swept; from the verbs, to keep, to sleep, to weep, to creep, to sweep.

Where d or t go before, the additional letter d or t, in this contracted form, coalesce into one letter with the radical d or t: if t were the radical, they coalesce into t; but if d were the radical, then into d or t, as the one or the other letter may be more easily pronounced: as, read, led, spread, shed, shred, bid, hid, chid, fed, bled, bred, sped, strid, rid; from the verbs, to read, to lead, to spread, to shed, to shread, to bid, to hide, to chide, to feed, to bleed, to breed, to speed, to stride, to slide, to ride. And thus, cast, hurt, cost, burst, eat, beat, sweat, sit, quit, smit, writ, bit, hit, met, shot; from the verbs to cast, to hurt, to cost, to burst, to eat, to beat, to sweat, to sit, to quit, to smite, to write, to bite, to hit, to meet, to shoot. And in like manner, lent, sent, rent, girt; from the verbs, to lend, to send, to rend, to gird.

The participle preterite or passive is often formed in en, instead of ed; as, been, taken, given, slain, known, from the verbs to be, to take, to give, to slay, to know.

Many words have two or more participles, as not only written, bitten, eaten, beaten, hidden, chidden, shotten, chosen, broken; but likewise writ, bit, eat, beat, hid, chid, shot, chose, broke, are promiscuously used in the participle, from the verbs to write, to bite, to eat, to beat, to hide, to chide, to shoot, to choose, to break, and many such like.

In the same manner sown, shewn, hewn, mown, loaden, laden, as well as sow'd, shew'd, hew'd, mow'd, loaded, laded, from the verbs to sow, to shew, to hew, to mow, to load, or lade.

Concerning these double participles it is difficult to give any rule; but he shall seldom err who remembers, that when a verb has a participle distinct from its preterite, as write, wrote, written, that distinct participle is more proper and elegant, as The book is written, is better than The book is wrote. Wrote however may be used in poetry; at least if we allow any authority to poets, who, in the exultation of genius, think themselves perhaps intitled to trample on grammarians.

There are other anomalies in the preterite.

1. Win, spin, begin, swim, strike, stick, sing, sting, fling, ring, wring, spring, swing, drink, sink, shrink, stink, come, run, find, bind, grind, wind, both in the preterite imperfect and participle passive, give won, spun, begun, swum, struck, stuck, sung, stung, flung, rung, wrung, sprung, swung, drunk, sunk, shrunk, hung, come, run, found, bound, ground, wound. And most of them are also formed in the preterite by a, as began, rang, sang, sprang, drank, came, ran, and some others; but most of these are now obsolete. Some in the participle passive likewise take en, as stricken, strucken, drunken, bounden.

2. Fight, teach, reach, seek, beseech, catch, buy, bring, think, work, make fought, taught, raught, sought, besought, caught, bought, brought, thought, wrought.

But a great many of these retain likewise the regular form, as teached, reached, beseeched, catched, worked.

3. Take, shake, forsake, wake, awake, stand, break, speak, bear, shear, swear, tear, weave, cleave, strive, thrive, drive, shine, rise, arise, smite, write, bide, abide, ride, choose, chuse, tread, get, beget, forget, seethe, make in both preterite and participle, took, forsook, woke, awoke, stood, broke, spoke, bore, shore, swore, tore, wore, wove, clove, strove, throve, drove, shone, rose, arose, smote, wrote, bode, abode, rode, chose, trode, got, begot, forgot, sod. But we say likewise, thrive, rise, smit, writ, abid, rid. In the preterite some are likewise formed by a, as brake, spake, bare, share, sware, tare, ware, clave, gat, begat, forgat, and perhaps some others, but more rarely. In the participle passive are many of them formed by en, as taken, shaken, forsaken, broken, spoken, born, shorn, sworn, torn, worn, woven, cloven, thriven, driven, risen, smitten, ridden, chosen, trodden, gotten, begotten, forgotten, sodden. And many do likewise retain the analogy in both, as waked, awaked, sheared, weaved, leaved, abided, seethed.

4. Give, bid, sit, make in the preterite, gave, bade, sate; in the participle passive, given, bidden, sitten; but in both bid.

5. Draw, know, grow, throw, blow, crow like a cock, fly, slay, see, ly, make their preterite drew, knew, grew, threw, blew, crew, flew, slew, saw; lay; their participles passive by n, drawn, known, grown, thrown, blown, flown, slain, seen, lien, lain. Yet from flee, is made fled; from go, went, from the old wend, but the participle is gone.

Of DERIVATION.

That the English language may be more easily understood, it is necessary to enquire how its derivative words are deduced from their primitives, and how the primitives are borrowed from other languages. In this enquiry I shall sometimes copy Dr. Wallis, and sometimes endeavour to supply his defects, and rectify his errours.

(d) Nouns are derived from verbs.

The thing implied in the verb as done or produced, is commonly either the present of the verb; as, to love, love; to fright, a fright; to fight, a fight; or

(d) [Nouns are derived from verbs. Such is the unqualified assertion of Dr. Johnson. M. Court de Gebelin, on the other hand, deduces all words from nouns. "Il a fallu nécessairement, que tous les autres mots viennent de noms. Il n'est aucun mot, de quelqu' espèce que ce soit, et dans quelque langue que ce soit, qui ne descende d'un nom." Hist. de Parole, p. 180. And thus one of our ingenious countrymen has asserted, that "the verbs are not of themselves the primitive words of our language. They are all in a state of composition. They are like the secondary mountains of the earth; they have been formed posterior to the ancient bulwarks of human speech, which are the nouns: I mean of course those nouns which are in their elementary state." Turner, Hist. of the Anglo-Sax. vol. iv. B. 8. ch. 1. But the question, which were prior, nouns or verbs, has obtained an examination more minute than what is contained in these assertions. "It is obvious to suppose," bishop Burgess has observed, "that the things which were nearest, and most necessary to man, were first denominated. And it may therefore seem, that the names of things were prior to verbs. But there is another question, which as necessarily obtrudes itself: Why were these things thus denominated? It seems natural to suppose, that they were denominated from their actions, uses, appearances, &c. And thus of animals, which it is probable were named as early as any of the objects, with which he was familiar, some might have been from their rapacity; some from their swiftness, &c. But in expressing the actions of things, the use of the verb, which is the symbol of action, is necessarily implied. So that the verbs, which were used to express every kind of action, must have been prior to the names of things, which were denominated from their actions. Not that all verbs were prior to all nouns, or that a particular class of verbs was prior to a particular class of nouns, but that every individual noun, which expressed the name of a thing from its action, was derived from a verb expressive of that action, which was ultimately referable to one general idea, which is the principle of every action." Ess. on the Study of Antiq. 2d edit. p. 89. "One of the objects of Lord Monboddó," he adds, "has been to shew, through the evidence afforded by language, that all ideas communicated by words, not denoting particular sounds, and certain external adjuncts, or personal relation, were originally made known through the means of one general idea, which is the principle of every action, and which by the multiplex variety of its combinations is suited to the expressing of every action; that all verbs, not imitative of sounds, &c. are resolvable to that general idea; that the names of things are derived from verbs, and therefore return to the same universal origin."

In the earliest state of man, his language, it is probable, was simple; and has been considered, in great measure, monosyllabick, without composition and inflexion. That it was derived from natural and external objects, by the exercise of the capacity which God gave to man to form a judgement of the things perceived by him, may well be supposed. And to the nouns of this rude period the observation of Mr. Turner must apply with indisputable force. The remark of Wachter on the derivation of words from natural objects, particularly deserves notice.

"Operæ pretium est ostendere, quanta sit vis naturæ in fingendis vocabulis. Primo, quædam voces ita sunt comparatæ, ut non solum idearum nostrarum, sed etiam rerum ipsarum sint imagines, et proinde ab ipsâ naturâ videantur ori hominum sponte ingestæ. Sic quando volumus significare id quod supra nos est, tunc aërem haustum in altum protrudimus, manifestâ vocis cum ipsâ re convenientiâ. Nam altus Gothis dicitur hauh, Anglosax. heah, Alam. et Francis hoh, Cambris uch, Anglis high, Belg. hoog, nobis hoch. Ad hanc classem spectant, heben levare in altum, haubt caput, pars hominis excelsa, et ad sublimia inspiciendo facta, hübel, hugel collis, hauffe cumulus, hæffe fæx, &c. In aliis vocibus aliæ exprimuntur naturæ qualitates. Sic clarum et perspicuum vocamus bar, obscurum dunkel, manifestâ signi cum re signatâ similitudine, quoniam claritas et obscuritas in ipsis vocibus jam continentur. Et sic in aliis nominibus alia insunt secreta, nec inventu difficilia, nec scitu injucunda." Gloss. Germ. Præf. § v.

Let us now attend to what Mr. Horne Tooke says in his introduction to the ancient theory, that language is originally composed only of nouns and verbs, and that these are the only necessary parts of speech, the rest, so named, being merely the abbreviations of these. I call it the ancient theory; which, it will be seen, in the strictest sense it is; and as it has been illustrated by modern diligence, let me not be considered as detracting from the improvement added to it by Mr. Tooke, in stating that the revival of it originated with etymologists anterior to him, however some of his followers have blindly considered it as a perfect novelty, and however he has concealed his love of kindred investigation.

His position is this: "The business of the mind, as far as it concerns language, appears to me to be very simple. It extends no farther than to receive impressions, that is, to have sensations or feelings. What are called its operations, are merely the operations of language. A consideration of ideas, or of the mind, or of things, relative to the parts of speech, will lead us no farther than to nouns; i. e. the signs of those impressions, or names of ideas. The other part of speech, the verb, must be accounted for from the necessary use of it in communication. It is in fact the communication itself; and therefore well denominated ῥῆμα, dictum. For the verb is quod loquimur; the noun, de quo." Div. of Purley, vol. i. p. 51. This may seem to support the general assertion, that nouns are derived from verbs. On the other hand, it has been remarked, that verbs are frequently no other than nouns with a final syllable added, and sometimes without any alteration of form; such as love, hope, fear, of the latter kind, in English; and of the former, in Saxon, caꞃian to care, to be anxious, from caꞃ, care, cyðan to make known from cyð, knowledge, &c. Turner, Hist. Anglo-Sax. vol. i. B. 8. ch. 1. Mr. Turner indeed asserts, that if we go through all the alphabet, we shall find that most of the Saxon verbs are composed of a noun, and the syllables an, ian, or ᵹan. This final syllable, he premises, is a word expressive of motion, or action, or possession. Yet, in the list of verbs thus derived by Mr. Turner, there are some which may be conceived to disclaim this origin, and to have been themselves the parents, not the offspring, of nouns. Is not the noun bad, a pledge, that is, the thing given or pledged, rather from the verb badian, to pledge, than the verb from the noun? And bæꞃ, a bier, is much more likely to be derived from beꞃan, to carry, than that the latter should originate from the former. The noun is here denominated from its use, that which bears or carries, or that which is borne, and therefore arose out of the verb which expresses this kind of action. The Greeks and Latins thus formed the similar nouns φέρετρον, and feretrum, from the verbs φέρω, and fero. Again behæs, a command, can be no other than the past participle of behatan, to command. So big, a crown, from bigan, to bend, where the appearance of the thing points to the verb as supplying the substantive. So if bye be an habi-

the preterite of the verb, as, to strike, I strick or strook, a stroke.

The action is the same with the participle present, as loving, frighting, fighting, striking.

The agent, or person acting, is denoted by the syllable er added to the verb, as lover, frighter, striker.

Substantives, adjectives, and sometimes other parts of speech, are changed into verbs: in which case the vowel is often lengthened, or the consonant softened; as, a house, to house; brass, to braze; glass, to glaze; grass, to graze; price, to prize; breath, to breathe; a fish, to fish; oil, to oil; further, to further; forward, to forward; hinder, to hinder.

Sometimes the termination en is added, especially to adjectives; as, haste, to hasten; length, to lengthen; strength, to strengthen; short, to shorten; fast, to fasten; white, to whiten; black, to blacken; hard, to harden; soft, to soften.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination y; as, a louse, lousy; wealth, wealthy; health, healthy; might, mighty; worth, worthy; wit, witty; lust, lusty; water, watery; earth, earthy; wood, a wood, woody; air, airy; a heart, hearty; a hand, handy.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination ful, denoting abundance; as, joy, joyful; fruit, fruitful; youth, youthful; care, careful; use, useful; delight, delightful; plenty, plentiful; help, helpful.

Sometimes, in almost the same sense, but with some kind of diminution thereof, the termination some is added, denoting something, or in some degree;

tation, and ꝺæl, a part, the former will be considered that which is built, from byan, to build, and the latter, that which is divided or parted, from ꝺælan, to divide.

However, that all language is reducible to nouns and verbs, is the doctrine of Plato; and is eloquently maintained in the Platonicæ Quæstiones of Plutarch. Of the same opinion was Aristotle: "Aristoteles duas partes orationis esse dicit, vocabula et verba." Varro de Ling. Lat. Hence the observation of Priscian: "Quibusdam philosophis placuit nomen et verbum solas esse partes orationis; cætera verò, adminicula vel juncturas earum." Lib. xi. To this opinion, in later times, Vossius, professor Schultens, Lennep, and others, have expressed their assent; but none so much in accordance with Mr. Tooke, as Hoogeven in his dissertation on the Greek particles. That particles are, as Mr. Tooke pronounces them, abbreviations of other words, is, however, neither the discovery of Hoogeven who preceded him, nor of Mr. Tooke himself. The fact is illustrated in the work of a learned German on the subject of the Hebrew particles, published in 1734.

"Particulæ separatæ, si non omnes, certè pleræque suâ naturâ sunt nomina. Hanc thesin, licet hactenus novam et inauditam, verissimam tamen esse, præsentes tibi persuadere poterunt pagellæ. His enim cum curâ perlectis, facilè intelliges omnes omnino Ebræorum particulas separatas aut nomina esse aut verba." Christ. Koerber, Lex. Partic. Hebr. This etymological principle is thus displayed by Hoogeven: "Primam, ut reliquarum, ita Graecae quoque linguae originem fuisse simplicissimam, ipsa natura ac ratio docent, primosque ὀνοματίτας nomina, quibus res, et verba quibus actiones exprimerent, non verò particulas instituisse, probabile est. Certè, cùm ex nominibus et verbis integra constet oratio, quorum haec actiones et affectiones, illa personas agentes et patientes indicant; jure quaeritur, an primaeva lingua habuerit particulas. — Reverà ipsae particulae olim fuerunt vel nomina, vel verba; ut clarè patebit, ubi de singularum particularum originibus dicam." Doctr. Particularum Ling. Gr. 1769. Præf.

The claim to originality, therefore, belongs not to Mr. Tooke. Nor in the application of the doctrine is he without predecessor or guide. Yet let us first attend to what a recent critick affirms: "Neither Skinner, nor Junius, nor Johnson, nor indeed any other English grammarian, or lexicographer, had any idea that the past participle in our own language was an abundant source of general terms; the discovery was Tooke's; and it becomes necessary to remark that we shall find Junius and Skinner in many instances (particularly Skinner) referring to the same Anglo-Saxon or old English verb, which Tooke has also fixed upon as the parent of some English noun; but the difference is this: Skinner refers generally to the verb, not unfrequently with a mere mallem deflecti, and knows neither in what manner, nor from what part, of the verb, such noun is immediately obtained: Tooke establishes the past participle to be the part of the verb, and explains the general manner of the adoption." Illustr. of English Philology by Charles Richardson, Esq. 1815. p. 40. Mr. Tooke certainly performs what is here stated. But who preceded him in this way of illustration? Mr. Richardson could not, or would not, inform the reader. I will therefore inform him, that Wachter, so long since as in 1737, and in a work well known, indeed most worthy to be known by all scholars, particularly discussed the method of deducing substantives from verbs and participles, which, it will be seen, was also an ancient practice:

"D. [est] Medium formandi substantiva à verbis, aliisque partibus orationis. Ita brand, incendium, derivatur à brennen, ardere; schuld, debitum, à sollen, debere; hemd, indusium, ab heimen, tegere; gelübd, votum, à loben, promittere; gemæld, pictura, à malen, pingere; fed, inimicitia, à fien, odisse; gegend, plaga, loca opposita, à gegen, contra. Et sic alia ab aliis. Confer exempla in De. In reliquis, quæ huc referri non possunt, d est litera participialis, et nota originis ex participio. Solent enim prisci ex participiis formare substantiva, et terminationem participialem derivatis relinquere, tanquam custodem originis. Hæc una litera nos quasi manu ducit ad permulta vocabulorum secreta intelligenda, quæ certè suam significandi vim non aliunde habent quàm à PRÆSENTIS TEMPORIS PARTICIPIO, à quo effluuntur. Hujusmodi sunt, abend, vespera, ab aben, deficere; heiland, servator, ab heilen, servare; freund, amicus, à freyen, amare; feind, inimicus, à fien, odisse; wind, ventus, à wehen, flare; mond, luna, à manen, monere." Gloss. Germ. Prolegom. § vi.

And have we none, amongst our own countrymen, besides Mr. Tooke, to whom something like this mode of deduction was known? Have not Skinner and Ray preceded him in his admired derivation of if? Is not the former, in his glossarial illustration of but and unless, acting directly upon this etymological principle? Are the labours of Junius and Lye never directed to similar purposes? Brian Twyne also, an eminent Saxon scholar, who flourished nearly two centuries since, and who, like Mr. Tooke, has derived shire from ꞅcyꞃan, seems to have understood this principle. See his Saxon Alphabet, MSS. Corp. Chr. Coll. Ox. No. 1750. Let us proceed to another of Mr. Tooke's celebrated derivations; the head, from the past participle heaved; and he will again want the merit, not of adaptation, but of originality. The Gothick "haubith is the head; from hauffjan, tollere, levare; the head being the most erect and elevated part of the body. Upon the same principle, the Sax. heafod, from heavan, and the English head, from the participle heaved, of the same signification, are made: a derivation more rational than either the Greek κεφαλη, or the Latin caput, can boast of." Revd. Mr. Drake on the Orig. of the Eng. Lang. Archæol. vol. v. p. 380.

While all must readily and gratefully admit, that Mr. Tooke has much enlarged and improved this method of illustration; none perhaps will now deny, that his theory is not a novelty even to Englishmen. An acute writer, speaking of Fortescue's Treatise on the Difference between an Absolute and Limited Monarchy, (which was published in 1714, not in 1724 as Mr. White states it,) has lately remarked, that into the pages of another of his countrymen on the subject of Saxon literature Mr. Tooke had looked silently but not in vain. This book was "not unknown to the late Mr. Horne Tooke, as is evident by some of the Saxon etymologies in his Diversions of Purley, borrowed from the first Lord Fortescue's glossarial annotations on this work of his venerable ancestor." A Review of Johnson's Criticism on the Style of Milton's English Prose, &c. By T. Holt White Esq. 1818. p. 19. It is indeed the object of the noble annotator, and it is excellently accomplished, to point out to the English reader "the great affinity between our language and the Saxon, and to be thereby put in a way to trace the original of the English tongue. — This language will help him to multitudes of etymologies." Pref. pp. xli, xlii.

It has been said, "that one great and obvious defect of Mr. Tooke's ingenious system, viewed in a general light, is, that it proceeds on the supposition that the Anglo-Saxon is a language completely insulated; or at least, that whatever intimacy of connexion it has with the cognate tongues in other respects, it has none with regard to the formation of its particles." Dr. Jamieson, Scott. Dict. in V. SEN. But though this defect attends it, though the author is not without obligation to the labours of others, though the work consists principally of details, and some mistakes in them might be exposed where truth and modesty alike are slighted; great ingenuity of hypothesis, together with successful illustrations of our ancient literature, is abundantly found in the Diversions of Purley; and the clearest light has hence been thrown upon the theory of language. Fairer would have been the fame of Mr. Tooke, if he had not intermixed with the elegances of philology what will never endear his name as a moralist or a politician.]

as, delight, delightsome; game, gamesome; irk, irksome; burden, burdensome; trouble, troublesome; light, lightsome; hand, handsome; alone, lonesome; toil, toilsome.

On the contrary, the termination less added to substantives, makes adjectives signifying want; as worthless, witless, heartless, joyless, careless, helpless. Thus comfort, comfortless; sap, sapless.

Privation or contrariety is very often denoted by the particle un prefixed to many adjectives, or in before words derived from the Latin; as, pleasant, unpleasant; wise, unwise; profitable, unprofitable; patient, impatient. Thus, unworthy, unhealthy, unfruitful, unuseful, and many more.

The original English privative is un; but as we often borrow from the Latin, or its descendants, words already signifying privation, as inefficacious, impious, indiscreet, the inseparable particles un and in have fallen into confusion, from which it is not easy to disentangle them.

Un is prefixed to all words originally English, as untrue, untruth, untaught, unhandsome.

Un is prefixed to all participles made privative adjectives, as unfeeling, unassisting, unaided, undelighted, unendeared.

Un ought never to be prefixed to a participle present, to mark a forbearance of action, as unsighing; but a privation of habit, as unpitying.

Un is prefixed to most substantives which have an English termination, as unfertileness, unperfectness, which, if they have borrowed terminations, take in or im, as infertility, imperfection; uncivil, incivility; unactive, inactivity.

In borrowing adjectives, if we receive them already compounded, it is usual to retain the particle prefixed, as indecent, inelegant, improper; but if we borrow the adjective, and add the privative particle, we commonly prefix un, as unpolite, ungallant.

The prepositive particles dis and mis, derived from the des and mes of the French, signify almost the same as un; yet dis rather imports contrariety than privation, since it answers to the Latin preposition de. Mis insinuates some error, and for the most part may be rendered by the Latin words male or perperam. To like, to dislike; honour, dishonour; to honour, to grace, to dishonour, to disgrace; to deign, to disdeign; chance, hap, mischance, mishap; to take, to mistake; deed, misdeed; to use, to misuse; to employ, to misemploy; to apply, to misapply.

Words derived from Latin written with de or dis retain the same signification, as distinguish, distinguo; detract, detraho; defame, defamo; detain, detineo.

The termination ly added to substantives, and sometimes to adjectives, forms adjectives that import some kind of similitude or agreement, being formed by contraction of lich or like.

A giant, giantly, giantlike; earth, earthly; heaven, heavenly; world, worldly; God, godly; good, goodly.

The same termination ly, added to adjectives, forms (g) adverbs of like signification; as beautiful, beautifully; sweet, sweetly; that is, in a beautiful manner; with some degree of sweetness.

The termination ish added to adjectives, imports diminution; and added to substantives, imports similitude or tendency to a character; as green, greenish; white, whitish; soft, softish; a thief, thievish; a wolf, wolvish; a child, childish.

We have forms of diminutives in substantives, though not frequent; as a hill, a hillock; a cock, a cockrel; a pike, pickrel; this is a French termination: a goose, a gosling; this is a German termination: a lamb, a lambkin; a chick, a chicken; a man, a manikin; a pipe, a pipkin; and thus Halkin, whence the patronymick Hawkins; Wilkin, Thomkin, and others.

Yet still there is another form of diminution among the English, by lessening the sound itself, especially of vowels; as there is a form of augmenting them by enlarging, or even lengthening it; and that sometimes not so much by change of the letters, as of their pronunciation; as, sup, sip, soop, sop, sippet, where, besides the extenuation of the vowel, there is added the French termination et; top, tip; spit, spout; babe, baby, booby, βῶπαις; great pronounced long, especially if with a stronger sound, grea-t; little pronounced long, lee-tle; ting, tang, tong, imports a succession of smaller and then greater sounds; and so in jingle, jangle, tingle, tangle, and many other made words.

Much however of this is arbitrary and fanciful, depending wholly on oral utterance, and therefore scarcely worthy the notice of Wallis.

Of concrete adjectives are made abstract substantives, by adding the termination ness, and a few in hood or head, noting character or qualities; as white, whiteness; hard, hardness; great, greatness; skilful, skilfulness; unskilfulness; godhead, manhood, maidenhead, widowhood, knighthood, priesthood, likelihood, falsehood.

There are other abstracts, partly derived from adjectives, and partly from verbs, which are formed by the addition of the termination th, a small change being sometimes made; as long, length; strong, strength;

(g) [This is the only notice, which Dr. Johnson has taken of ADVERBS. In the same way he overpasses CONJUNCTIONS and PREPOSITIONS. These indeed are almost wholly abbreviations, or particles, which originally belonged to a different class of words. See the preceding note.

The ADVERB, as it is called, is eminently useful, in compendiously expressing, in one word, what would otherwise require two or more; and joined to verbs, participles, and adjectives, denotes quality or circumstance: as affirmation in certainly, yes; negation in no, not; doubt in perhaps; interrogation in how; time present in now; past in lately; future in hereafter; uncertain or indefinite in when; place in here, hither, within; order in secondly, thirdly. Quality or manner is abundantly expressed by adverbs formed from adjectives and participles, as Dr. Johnson has observed, with the termination ly; as ably, contentedly, learnedly.

The CONJUNCTION connects either sentences or words; and is called copulative, when it expresses addition, a cause, supposition or condition; as and, both, but, because, for, if, that: disjunctive, when it continues the connection, but expresses opposition of meaning in various degrees; as although, though, but, or, nor, either, neither, than, unless, &c.

The PREPOSITION is so called, because it is placed before a substantive, and connects it with other words: as above, about, before, behind, in, into, &c. Most of our prepositions originally denoted the relation of place; but are now applied to various relations. One great use of them in our language, Dr. Lowth observes, is to express those relations which in some languages are chiefly marked by cases, or the different endings of the noun.

The INTERJECTION yet remains to be noticed, which is the expression of different affections and passions; of surprise in ah; of grief in alas, ah, and oh; of exultation and triumph in aha, huzza; of admiration and calling attention in lo and behold, &c. They are thrown in between the parts of a sentence, and sometimes commence it. The interjection O, prefixed to nouns, expresses more forcibly the address made to any person or thing; and answers to the vocative case of the Latins: prefixed to verbs, it sometimes denotes exhortation, and sometimes solicits pity.

Of these parts of speech we may say lastly with the admired author of the Principles of French Grammar, "En quoi les adverbes, les prépositions et les conjonctions, sont elles différentes des autres parties du discours? En ce qu'elles sont indéclinables, et qu'elles ne sont susceptibles d'aucun changement. Ainsi on ne peut ni les decliner comme les noms, ni les conjuguer comme les verbes."] broad, breadth; wide, width; deep, depth; true, truth; warm, warmth; dear, dearth; slow, slowth; merry, mirth; heal, health; well, weal, wealth; dry, droughth: young, youth; and so moon, month.

Like these are some words derived from verbs; dy, death; till, tilth; grow, growth; mow, later mowth, after mow'th; commonly spoken and written later math, after math; steal, stealth; bear, birth; rue, ruth; and probably earth from to ear or plow; fly, flight; weigh, weight; fray, fright; to draw, draught.

These should rather be written flighth, frighth, only that custom will not suffer h to be twice repeated.

The same form retain, faith, spight, wreathe, wrath, broth, froth, breath, sooth, worth, light, wight, and the like, whose primitives are either entirely obsolete, or seldom occur. Perhaps they are derived from fey or foy, spry, wry, wreak, brew, mow, fry, bray, say, work.

Some ending in ship imply an office, employment, or condition; as, kingship, wardship, guardianship, partnership, stewardship, headship, lordship.

Thus worship, that is, worthship; whence worshipful, and to worship.

Some few ending in dom, rick, wick, do especially denote dominion, at least state or condition; as kingdom, dukedom, earldom, princedom, popedom, christendom, freedom, wisdom, whoredom, bishoprick, bailywick.

Ment and age are plainly French terminations, and are of the same import with us as among them, scarcely ever occurring, except in words derived from the French, as commandment, usage.

There are in English often long trains of words allied by their meaning and derivation; as, to beat, a bat, batoon, a battle, a beetle, a battle-door, to batter, batter, a kind of glutinous composition for food, made by beating different bodies into one mass. All these are of similar signification, and perhaps derived from the Latin batuo. Thus take, touch, tickle, tack, tackle; all imply a local conjunction, from the Latin tango, tetigi, tactum.

From two are formed twain, twice, twenty, twelve, twins, twine, twist, twirl, twig, twitch, twinge, between, betwixt, twilight, twibil.

The following remarks, extracted from Wallis, are ingenious, but of more subtlety than solidity, and such as perhaps might in every language be enlarged without end.

Sn usually imply the nose, and what relates to it. From the Latin nasus are derived the French nes and the English nose; and nesse, a promontory, as projecting like a nose. But as if from the consonants ns taken from nasus, and transposed, that they may the better correspond, sn denote nasus; and thence are derived many words that relate to the nose, as snout, sneeze, snore, snort, snear, snicker, snot, snevil, snite, snuff, snuffle, snaffle, snarle, snudge.

There is another sn, which may perhaps be derived from the Latin sinuo, as snake, sneak, snail, snare; so likewise snap and snatch, snib, snub.

Bl imply a blast; as, blow, blast, to blast, to blight, and, metaphorically, to blast one's reputation; bleat, bleak, a bleak place, to look bleak or weather-beaten, bleak, blay, bleach, bluster, blurt, blister, blab, bladder, bleb, blister, blabber-lipp't, blubber-check't, bloted, blote-herrings, blast, blaze, to blow, that is, blossom, bloom; and perhaps blood and blush.

In the native words of our tongue is to be found a great agreement between the letters and the thing signified; and therefore the sounds of letters smaller, sharper, louder, closer, softer, stronger, clearer, more obscure, and more stridulous, do very often intimate the like effects in the things signified.

Thus words that begin with str intimate the force and effect of the thing signified, as if probably derived from στρώννυμι, or strenuus; as, strong, strength, strew, strike, streake, stroke, stripe, strive, strife, struggle, strout, strut, stretch, strait, strict, streight, that is, narrow, distrain, stress, distress, string, strap, stream, streamer, strand, strip, stray, struggle, strange, stride, straddle.

St in like manner imply strength, but in a less degree, so much only as is sufficient to preserve what has been already communicated, rather than acquire any new degree; as if it were derived from the Latin sto: for example, stand, stay, that is, to remain, or to prop; staff, stay, that is, to oppose, stop, to stuff, stifle, to stay, that is, to stop; a stay, that is, an obstacle; stick, stut, stutter, stammer, stagger, stickle, stick, stake, a sharp pale, and any thing deposited at play; stock, stem, sting, to sting, stink, stitch, stud, stanchion, stub, stubble, to stub up, stump, whence stumble, stalk, to stalk, step, to stamp with the feet, whence to stamp, that is, to make an impression and a stamp; stow, to stow, to bestow, steward or stoward, stead, steady, steadfast, stable, a stable, a stall, to stall, stool, stall, still, stall, stallage, stall, stage, still adj. and still adv. stale, stout, sturdy, steed, stoat, stallion, stiff, stark-dead, to starve with hunger or cold; stone, steel, stern, stanch, to stanch blood, to stare, steep, steeple, stair, standard, a stated measure, stately. In all these, and perhaps some others, st denote something firm and fixed.

Thr imply a more violent degree of motion, as throw, thrust, throng, throb, through, threat, threaten, thrall, throws.

Wr imply some sort of obliquity or distortion, as wry, to wreathe, wrest, wrestle, wring, wrong, wrinch, wrench, wrangle, wrinkle, wrath, wreak, wrack, wretch, wrist, wrap.

Sw imply a silent agitation, or a softer kind of lateral motion; as sway, swag, to sway, swagger, swerve, sweat, sweep, swill, swim, swing, swift, sweet, switch, swinge.

Nor is there much difference of sm in smoothe, smug, smile, smirk, smite, which signifies the same as to strike, but is a softer word; small, smell, smack, smother, smart, a smart blow properly signifies such a kind of stroke as with an originally silent motion implied in sm, proceeds to a quick violence, denoted by ar suddenly ended, as is shewn by t.

Cl denote a kind of adhesion or tenacity, as in cleave, clay, cling, climb, clamber, clammy, clasp, to clasp, to clip, to clinch, cloak, clog, close, to close, a clod, a clot, as a clot of blood, clouted cream, a clutter, a cluster.

Sp imply a kind of dissipation or expansion, especially a quick one, particularly if there be an r, as if it were from spargo or separo: for example, spread, spring, sprig, sprout, sprinkle, split, splinter, spill, spit, sputter, spatter.

Sl denote a kind of silent fall, or a less observable motion; as in slime, slide, slip, slipper, sly, sleight, slit, slow, slack, slight, sling, slap.

And so likewise, ash, in crash, rash, gash, flash, clash, lash, slash, plash, trash, indicate something acting more nimbly and sharply. But ush, in crush, rush, gush, flush, blush, brush, hush, push, implies something as acting more obtusely and dully. Yet in both there is indicated a swift and sudden motion, not instantaneous, but gradual, by the continued sound sh.

Thus in fling, sling, ding, swing, cling, sing, wring, sting, the tingling of the termination ng, and the sharpness of the vowel i, imply the continuation of a very slender motion or tremor, at length indeed vanishing, but not suddenly interrupted. But in tink, wink, sink, clink, chink, think, that end in a mute consonant, there is also indicated a sudden ending.

If there be an l, as in jingle, tingle, tinkle, mingle, sprinkle, twinkle, there is implied a frequency, or iteration of small acts. And the same frequency of acts, but less subtile by reason of the clearer vowel a, is indicated in jangle, tangle, spangle, mangle, wrangle, brangle, dangle; as also in mumble, grumble, jumble, tumble, stumble, rumble, crumble, fumble. But at the same time the close u implies something obscure or obtunded; and a congeries of consonants mbl, denotes a confused kind of rolling or tumbling, as in ramble, scamble, scramble, wamble, amble; but in these there is something acute.

In nimble, the acuteness of the vowel denotes celerity. In sparkle, sp denotes dissipation, ar an acute crackling, k a sudden interruption, l a frequent iteration; and in like manner in sprinkle, unless in may imply the subtilty of the dissipated guttules. Thick and thin differ, in that the former ends with an obtuse consonant, and the later with an acute.

In like manner, in squeek, squeak, squeal, squall, brawl, wrawl, yaul, spaul, screek, shreek, shril, sharp, shrivel, wrinkle, crack, crash, clash, gnash, plash, crush, hush, hisse, fisse, whist, soft, jarr, hurl, curl, whirl, buz, bussle, spindle, dwindle, twine, twist, and in many more, we may observe the agreement of such sort of sounds with the things signified: and this so frequently happens, that scarce any language which I know can be compared with ours. So that one monosyllable word, of which kind, are almost all ours, emphatically expresses what in other languages can scarce be explained but by compounds, or decompounds, or sometimes a tedious circumlocution.

We have many words borrowed from the Latin; but the greatest part of them were communicated by the intervention of the French; as grace, face, elegant, elegance, resemble.

Some verbs, which seem borrowed from the Latin, are formed from the present tense, and some from the supines.

From the present are formed spend, expend, expendo; conduce, conduco; despise, despicio; approve, approbo; conceive, concipio.

From the supines, supplicate, supplico; demonstrate, demonstro; dispose, dispono; expatiate, expatior; suppress, supprimo; exempt, eximo.

Nothing is more apparent, than that Wallis goes too far in quest of originals. Many of these which seem selected as immediate descendents from the Latin, are apparently French, as conceive, approve, expose, exempt.

Some words purely French, not derived from the Latin, we have transferred into our language; as, garden, garter, buckler, to advance, to cry, to plead, from the French jardin, jartier, bouclier, avancer, cryer, plaider; though indeed, even of these, part is of Latin original.

As to many words which we have in common with the Germans, it is doubtful whether the old Teutons borrowed them from the Latins, or the Latins from the Teutons, or both had them from some common original; as, wine, vinum; wind, ventus; went, veni; way, via; wall, vallum; wallow, volvo; wool, vellus; will, volo; worm, vermis; worth, virtus; wasp, vespa; day, dies; draw, traho; tame, domo, δαμάω; yoke, jugum, ζεῦγος; over, upper, super, ὑπὲρ; am, sum, εἰμὶ; break, frango; fly, volo; blow, flo. I make no doubt but the Teutonick is more ancient than the Latin: and it is no less certain, that the Latin, which borrowed a great number of words, not only from the Greek, especially the Æolick, but from other neighbouring languages, as the Oscan and others, which have long become obsolete, received not a few from the Teutonick. It is certain, that the English, German, and other Teutonick languages, retained some derived from the Greek, which the Latin has not; as ax, achs, mit, ford, pfurd, daughter, tochter, mickle, mingle, moon, sear, grave, graff, to grave, to scrape, whole, from ἀξίνη, μετὰ, πορθμος, θυγατὴρ, μεγάλος, μιγνύω, μήνη, ξηρος, γράφω, ὅλος. Since they received these immediately from the Greeks, without the intervention of the Latin language, why may not other words be derived immediately from the same fountain, though they be likewise found among the Latins?

Our ancestors were studious to form borrowed words, however long, into monosyllables; and not only cut off the formative terminations, but cropped the first syllable, especially in words beginning with a vowel; and rejected not only vowels in the middle, but likewise consonants of a weaker sound, retaining the stronger, which seem the bones of words, or changing them for others of the same organ, in order that the sound might become the softer; but especially transposing their order, that they might the more readily be pronounced without the intermediate vowels. For example, in expendo, spend; exemplum, sample; excipio, scape; extraneus, strange; extractum, stretch'd; excrucio, to screw; exscorio, to scour; excortico, to scratch; and others beginning with ex: as also, emendo, to mend; episcopus, bishop; in Danish, bisp; epistola, pistle; hospitale, spittle; Hispania, Spain; historia, story.

Many of these etymologies are doubtful, and some evidently mistaken.

The following are somewhat harder, Alexander, Sander, Elisabetha, Betty; apis, bee; aper, bar; p passing into b, as in bishop; and by cutting off a from the beginning, which is restored in the middle: but for the old bar or bare, we now say boar; as for lang, long; for bain, bane; for stane, stone; aprugna, brawn, p being changed into b, and a transposed, as in aper, and g changed into w, as in pignus, pawn; lege, law; ἀλωπὴξ, fox; cutting off the beginning, and changing p into f, as in pellis, a fell; pullus, a foal; pater, father; pavor, fear; polio, file; pleo, impleo, fill, full; piscis, fish; and transposing o into the middle, which was taken from the beginning; apex, a piece; peak, pike; zophorus, freese; mustum, stum; defensio, fence; dispensator, spencer; asculto, escouter, Fr. scout; exscalpo, scrape, restoring l instead of r, and hence scrap, scrable, scrawl; exculpo, scoop; exterritus, start; extonitus, attonitus, stonn'd; stomachus, maw; offendo, fined; obstipo, stop; audere, dare; cavere, ware, whence a-ware, beware, wary, warn, warning; for the Latin v consonant formerly sounded like our w, and the modern sound of the v consonant was formerly that of the letter f, that is, the Æolick digamma, which had the sound of φ, and the modern sound of the letter f was that of the Greek φ or ph; ulcus, ulcere, ulcer sore, and hence sorry, sorrow, sorrowful; ingenium, engine, gin; scalenus, leaning, unless you would rather derive it from κλίνω, whence inclino; infundibulum, funnel; gagates, jett; projectum, to jett forth, a jetty; cucullus, a cowl.

There are syncopes somewhat harder; from tempore, time; from nomine, name; domina, dame; as the French homme, femme, nom, from homine, fœmina, nomine. Thus pagina, page; ποτήριον, pot; κύπελλα, cup; cantharus, can; tentorium, tent; precor, pray; præda, prey; specio, speculor, spy; plico, ply; implico, imply; replico, reply; complico, comply; sedes episcopalis, see.

A vowel is also cut off in the middle, that the number of the syllables may be lessened; as, amita, aunt; spiritus, spright; debitum, debt; dubito, doubt; comes, comitis, count; clericus, clerk; quietus, quit, quite; acquieto, to acquit; separo, to spare; stabilis, stable; stabulum, stable; pallacium, palace, place; rabula, rail, rawl, wrawl, brawl, rable, brable; quæsitio, quest.

As also a consonant, or at least one of a softer sound, or even a whole syllable; rotundus, round; fragilis, frail; securus, sure; regula, rule; tegula, tile; subtilis, subtle; nomen, noun; decanus, dean; computo, count; subitaneus, suddain, soon; superare, to soar; periculum, peril; mirabile, marvel; as magnus, main; dignor, deign, tingo, stain; tinctum, taint; pingo, paint; prædari, reach.

The contractions may seem harder, where many of them meet, as κυριακὸς, kyrk, church; presbyter, priest; sacristanus, sexton; frango, fregi, break, breach; fagus, φηγὸς, beech, f changed into b, and g into ch, which are letters near a-kin; frigesco, freeze; frigesco, fresh, sc in sh, as above in bishop, fish, so in scapha, skiff, skip, and refrigesco, refresh; but viresco, fresh; phlebotomus, fleam; bovina, beef; vitulina, veal; scutifer, squire; pœnitentia, penance; sanctuarium, sanctuary, sentry; quæsitio, chase; perquisitio, purchase; anguilla, eel; insula, isle, ile, island, iland; insuletta, islet, ilet; eyght and more contractedly ey, whence Owsney, Ruley, Ely; examinare, to scan, namely, by rejecting from the beginning and end e and o, according to the usual manner, the remainder xamin, which the Saxons, who did not use x, writ scamen, or scamen is contracted into scan; as from dominus, don; nomine, noun; abomino, ban; and indeed apum examen they turned into sciame; for which we say swarme, by inserting r to denote the murmuring; thesaurus, store; sedile, stool; ὑετὸς, wet; sudo, sweat; gaudium, gay; jocus, joy; succus, juice; catena, chain; caliga, calga; chause, chausse, Fr. hose; extinguo, stanch, squench, quench, stint; foras, forth; species, spice; recito, read; adjuvo, aid; αἰὼν, ævum, ay, age, ever; floccus, lock; excerpo, scrape, scrabble, scrawl; extravagus, stray, straggle; collectum, clot clutch; colligo, coil; recolligo, recoil; severo, swear; stridulus, shrill; procurator, proxy; pulso, to push; calamus, a quill; impetere, to impeach; augeo, auxi, wax; and vanesco, vanui, wane; syllabare, to spell; puteus, pit; granum, corn; comprimo, cramp, crump, crumple, crinkle.

Some may seem harsher, yet may not be rejected, for it at least appears, that some of them are derived from proper names, and there are others whose etymology is acknowledged by every body; as, Alexander, Elick, Scander, Sander, Sandy, Sanny; Elizabetha, Elizabeth, Elisabeth, Betty, Bess; Margareta, Mar- garet, Marget, Meg, Peg; Maria, Mary, Mal, Bal, Malkin, Mawkin, Mawkes; Matthæus, Mattha, Matthew; Martha, Matt, Pat; Gulielmus, Wilhelmus, Girolamo, Guillaume, William, Will, Bill, Wilkin, Wicken, Wicks, Wecks.

Thus cariophyllus, flos; gerofilo, Ital. giriflee, gilofer, Fr. giliflower, which the vulgar call julyflower, as if derived from the month July; petroselinum, parsly; portulaca, purslain; cydonium, quince; cydoniatum, quiddeny; persicum, peach; eruca, eruke, which they corrupt to ear-wig, as if it took its name from the ear; annulus geminus, a gimmal or gimbal ring; and thus the word gimbal and jumbal is transferred to other things thus interwoven; quelques choses, kickshaws. Since the origin of these, and many others, however forced, is evident, it ought to appear no wonder to any one if the ancients have thus disfigured many, especially as they so much affected monosyllables; and, to make them sound the softer, took this liberty of maiming, taking away, changing, transposing, and softening them.

But while we derive these from the Latin, I do not mean to say, that many of them did not immediately come to us from the Saxon, Danish, Dutch, and Teutonick languages, and other dialects, and some taken more lately from the French or Italians, or Spaniards.

The same word, according to its different significations often has a different origin; as, to bear a burden, from fero; but to bear, whence, birth, born, bairn, comes from pario, and a bear, at least if it be of Latin original, from fera. Thus perch, a fish, from perca; but perch, a measure, from pertica, and likewise to perch. To spell is from syllaba; but spell, an inchantment, by which it is believed that the boundaries are so fixed in lands, that none can pass them against the master's will, from expello; and spell, a messenger, from epistola; whence gospel, good-spel, or god-spell. Thus freese, or freeze, from frigesco; but freeze, an architectonic word, from zophorus; but freese, for cloth; from Frisia, or perhaps from frigesco, as being more fit than any other for keeping out the cold.

There are many words among us, even monosyllables, compounded of two or more words, at least serving instead of compounds, and comprising the signification of more words than one; as, from scrip and roll comes scroll; from proud and dance, prance; from st, of the verb stay or stand and out, is made stout; from stout and hardy, sturdy; from sp of spit or spew, and out, comes spout; from the same sp, with the termination in, is spin; and adding out, spin out; and from the same sp, with it, is spit, which only differs from spout in that it is smaller, and with less noise and force; but sputter is, because of the obscure u, something between spit and spout; and by reason of adding r, it intimates a frequent iteration and noise, but obscurely confused: whereas spatter, on account of the sharper and clearer vowel a, intimates a more distinct noise, in which it chiefly differs from sputter. From the same sp, and the termination ark, comes spark, signifying a single emission of fire with a noise; namely, sp the emission, ar the more acute noise, and k, the mute consonant, intimates its being suddenly terminated; but adding l, is made the frequentative sparkle. The same sp, by adding r, that is spr, implies a more lively impetus of diffusing or expanding itself; to which adding the termination ing, it becomes spring; its vigour spr imports, its sharpness the termination ing, and lastly in acute and tremulous, ends in the mute consonant g, denotes the sudden ending of any motion, that it is meant in its primary signification, of a single, not a complicated exilition. Hence we call spring whatever has an elastick force; as also a fountain of water, and thence the origin of any thing; and to spring, to germinate; and spring, one of the four seasons. From the same spr and out, is formed sprout, and with the termination ig, sprig; of which the following, for the most part, is the difference; sprout, of a grosser sound, imports a fatter or grosser bud; sprig, of a slenderer sound, denotes a smaller shoot. In like manner, from str of the verb strive, and out, comes strout and strut. From the same str, and the termination uggle, is made struggle; and this gl imports, but without any great noise, by reason of the obscure sound of the vowel u. In like manner, from throw and roll is made trull; and almost in the same sense is trundle, from throw or thrust, and rundle. Thus graff or grough is compounded of grave and rough; and trudge from tread or trot, and drudge.

In these observations it is easy to discover great sagacity and great extravagance, an ability to do much defeated by the desire of doing more than enough. It may be remarked,

1. That Wallis's derivations are often so made, that by the same licence any language may be deduced from any other.

2. That he makes no distinction between words immediately derived by us from the Latin, and those which being copied from other languages, can therefore afford no example of the genius of the English language, or its laws of derivation.

3. That he derives from the Latin, often with great harshness and violence, words apparently Teutonick; and therefore, according to his own declaration, probably older than the tongue to which he refers them.

4. That some of his derivations are apparently erroneous.

SYNTAX.

The established practice of grammarians requires that I should here treat of the Syntax; but our language has so little inflection, or variety of terminations, that its construction neither requires nor admits many rules. Wallis therefore has totally neglected it; and Jonson, whose desire of following the writers upon the learned languages made him think a syntax indispensably necessary, has published such petty observations as were better omitted.

The verb, as in other languages, agrees with the nominative in number and person; as, Thou fliest from good; He runs to death.

Our adjectives and pronouns are invariable.

Of two substantives the noun possessive is the genitive; as, His father's glory; The sun's heat.

Verbs transitive require an oblique case; as, He loves me; You fear him.

All prepositions require an oblique case: He gave this to me; He took this from me; He says this of me; He came with me.

PROSODY.

It is common for those that deliver the grammar of modern languages, to omit their Prosody. So that of the Italians is neglected by Buomattei; that of the French by Desmarais; and that of the English by Wallis, Cooper, and even by Jonson though a poet. But as the laws of metre are included in the idea of a grammar, I have thought it proper to insert them.

PROSODY comprises orthoepy, or the rules of pronunciation; and orthometry, or the laws of versification.

PRONUNCIATION is just, when every letter has its proper sound, and when every syllable has its proper accent, or which in English versification is the same, its proper quantity.

The sounds of the letters have been already explained; and rules for the accent or quantity are not easily to be given, being subject to innumerable exceptions. Such however as I have read or formed, I shall here propose.

1. Of dissyllables formed by affixing a termination, the former syllable is commonly accented, as childish, kingdóm, áctest, ácted, tóilsome, lóver, scóffer, fairer, forémost, zéalous, fúlness, gódly, méekly, ártist.

2. Dissyllables formed by prefixing a syllable to the radical word, have commonly the accent on the latter; as, to begét, to beseém, to bestów.

3. Of dissyllables, which are at once nouns and verbs, the verb has commonly the accent on the latter, and the noun on the former syllable; as, to descánt, a déscant; to cemént, a cément; to contráct, a cóntract.

This rule has many exceptions. Though verbs seldom have their accent on the former, yet nouns often have it on the latter syllable; as, delíght, perfúme.

4. All dissyllables ending in y, as cranny; in our, as labour, favour; in ow, as willow, wállow, except allów; in le, as báttle, bible; in ish, as bánish; in ck, as cámbrick, cássock; in ter, as to bátter; in age, as cóurage; in en, as fásten; in et, as quíet, accent the former syllable.

5. Dissyllable nouns in er, as cánker, bútter; have the accent on the former syllable.

6. Dissyllable verbs terminating in a consonant and e final, as comprise, escápe; or having a diphthong in the last syllable, as appéase, revéal; or ending in two consonants, as atténd, have the accent on the latter syllable.

7. Dissyllable nouns having a diphthong in the latter syllable, have commonly their accent on the latter syllable, as applaúse; except words in ain, cértain, moúntain.

8. Trissyllables formed by adding a termination, or prefixing a syllable, retain the accent of the radical word, as lóveliness, ténderness, contémner, wággoner, phýsical, bespátter, cómmenting, comménding, assúrance.

9. Trissyllables ending in ous, as grácious, árduous; in al, as cápital; in ion, as méntion, accent the first.

10. Trissyllables ending in ce, ent, and ate, accent the first syllable, as cóuntenance, cóntinence, ármament, ímminent, élegant, própagate, except they be derived from words having the accent on the last, as connívance, acquáintance; or the middle syllable hath a vowel before two consonants, as promúlgate.

11. Trissyllables ending in y, as éntity, spécify, líberty, víctory, súbsidy, commonly accent the first syllable.

12. Trissyllables in re or le accent the first syllable, as légible, théatre, except discíple, and some words which have a position, as exámple, epístle.

13. Trissyllables in ude commonly accent the first syllable, as plénitude.

14. Trissyllables ending in ator or atour, as creátor, or having in the middle syllable a diphthong, as endeávour; or a vowel before two consonants, as doméstick, accent the middle syllable.

15. Trissyllables that have their accent on the last syllable are commonly French, as acquiésce, repartée, magazíne, or words formed by prefixing one or two syllables to an acute syllable, as immatúre, overchárge.

16. Polysyllables, or words of more than three syllables, follow the accent of the words from which they are derived, as árrogating, cóntinency, incóntinently, comméndable, commúnicableness. We should therefore say dispútable, indispútable, rather than dísputable, indísputable; and advertísement rather than advértisement.

17. Words in ion have the accent upon the antepenult, as salvátion, perturbátion, concóction; words in atour or ator on the (h) penult, as dedicátor.

18. Words ending in le commonly have the accent on the first syllable, as ámicable, unless the second syllable have a vowel before two consonants, as combústible.

19. Words ending in ous have the accent on the antepenult, as uxórious, volúptuous.

20. Words ending in ty have their accent on the antepenult, as pusillanímity, actívity.

These rules are not advanced as complete or infallible, but proposed as useful. Almost every rule of every language has its exceptions; and in English, as in other tongues, much must be learned by example and authority. Perhaps more and better rules may be given that have escaped my observation.

VERSIFICATION is the arrangement of a certain number of syllables according to certain laws.

The feet of our verses are either Iambick, as alóft creáte; or Trochaick, as hóly, lófty.

Our Iambick measure comprises verses

Of four syllables,

"Most good, most fair,
Or things as rare,
To call you's lost;
For all the cost
Words can bestow,
So poorly show
Upon your praise,
That all the ways
Sense hath, come short." Drayton.

"With ravish'd ears
The monarch hears." Dryden.

Of six,

"Thus while we are abroad,
Shall we not touch our lyre?
Shall we not sing an ode?
Shall that holy fire,
In us that strongly glow'd,
In this cold air expire?

"Though in the utmost Peak
Awhile we do remain,
Amongst the mountains bleak,
Expos'd to sleet and rain,
No sport our hours shall break,
To exercise our vein.

(h) [This is the Latin accent; and it is now more usual to say dédicator than dedicátor; and so in many other polysyllables, terminating in ator. Medi̇ćtor, however, is mostly pronounced, and certainly with greater dignity, than on the first syllable, with the accent on the penult.]

"Who though bright Phœbus' beams
Refresh the southern ground,
And though the princely Thames
With beauteous nymphs abound,
And by old Cambers streams
Be many wonders found.

"Yet many rivers clear
Here glide in silver swathes,
And what of all most dear,
Buxton's delicious baths,
Strong ale and noble chear,
T'asswage breem winter's scathes.

"In places far or near,
Or famous or obscure,
Where wholsom is the air,
Or where the most impure,
All times, and every where,
The muse is still in ure." Drayton.

Of eight, which is the usual measure for short Poems.

"And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown, and mossy cell,
Where I may sit, and nightly spell
Of ev'ry star the sky doth shew,
And ev'ry herb that sips the dew." Milton.

Of ten, which is the common measure of heroick and tragick poetry.

"Full in the midst of this created space,
Betwixt heav'n, earth, and skies, there stands a place
Confining on all three; with triple bound;
Whence all things, though remote, are view'd around,
And thither bring their undulating sound.
The palace of loud Fame, her seat of pow'r,
Plac'd on the summit of a lofty tow'r;
A thousand winding entries long and wide
Receive of fresh reports a flowing tide.
A thousand crannies in the walls are made;
Nor gate nor bars exclude the busy trade.
'Tis built of brass, the better to diffuse
The spreading sounds, and multiply the news;
Where echo's in repeated echo's play:
A mart for ever full; and open night and day.
Nor silence is within, nor voice express,
But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease;
Confus'd, and chiding, like the hollow rore
Of tides, receding from th' insulted shore;
Or like the broken thunder, heard from far,
When Jove to distance drives the rolling war.
The courts are fill'd with a tumultuous din
Of crouds, or issuing forth, or entering in:
A thorough-fare of news; where some devise
Things never heard, some mingle truth with lies:
The troubled air with empty sounds they beat,
Intent to hear, and eager to repeat." Dryden.

In all these measures the accents are to be placed on even syllables; and every line considered by itself is more harmonious, as this rule is more strictly observed. The variations necessary to pleasure belong to the art of poetry, not the rules of grammar.

Our Trochaick measures are

Of three syllables,

"Here we may
Think and pray,
Before death
Stops our breath:
Other joys
Are but toys." Walton's Angler.

Of five,

"In the days of old,
Stories plainly told,
Lovers felt annoy." Old Ballad.

Of (i) seven,

"Fairest piece of well-form'd earth,
Urge not thus your haughty birth." Waller.

In these measures the accent is to be placed on the odd syllables.

These are the measures which are now in use, and above the rest those of seven, eight, and ten syllables. Our ancient poets wrote verses sometimes of twelve syllables, as Drayton's Polyolbion.

"Of all the Cambrian shires their heads that bear so high,
And farth'st survey their soils with an ambitious eye,
Mervinia for her hills, as for their matchless crowds,
The nearest that are said to kiss the wand'ring clouds,
Especial audience craves, offended with the throng,
That she of all the rest neglected was so long;
Alledging for herself, when through the Saxon's pride,
The godlike race of Brute to Severn's setting side
Were cruelly inforc'd, her mountains did relieve
Those whom devouring war else every where did grieve.
And when all Wales beside (by fortune or by might)
Unto her ancient foe resign'd her ancient right,
A constant maiden still she only did remain,
The last her genuine laws which stoutly did retain.
And as each one is prais'd for her peculiar things;
So only she is rich, in mountains, meres, and springs,
And holds herself as great in her superfluous waste,
As others by their towns, and fruitful tillage grac'd."

(i) [The stanza in the trochaick measure of seven syllables is pleasingly diversified by our old poets: by Sir Philip Sidney in five lines:

"Well, in absence this will die;
Leave to see, and leave to wonder:
Absence sure will help, if I
Can learn how myself to sunder
From what in my heart doth lie."
Astrophel & Stella, Song xi.

In six:

"O dear life, when shall it be
That mine eyes thine eyes may see?
And in them thy mind discover,
Whether absence have had force
Thy remembrance to divorce
From the image of the lover?
Astrophel & Stella, Song x.

And Milton, in the same number, but with varied rhymes:

"Lord, my God, if I have thought
Or done this; if wickedness
Be in my hands; if I have wrought
Ill to him that meant me peace;
Or to him have rendered less
And not freed my foe for nought:

"Let the enemy pursue my soul,
And overtake it; let him tread
My life down to the earth, and roll
In the dust my glory dead.
In the dust; and there outspread,
Lodge it with dishonour foul." Psalm vii.]

And of fourteen, as Chapman's Homer.

" And as the mind of such a man, that hath a long way gone,
And either knoweth not his way, or else would let alone
His purpos'd journey, is distract."

The measures of twelve and fourteen syllables, were often mingled by our old poets, sometimes in alternate lines, and sometimes in alternate couplets.

The verse of twelve lines, called an Alexandrine, is now only used to diversify heroick lines.

" Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full-resounding line,
The long majestick march, and energy divine." — Pope.

The pause in the Alexandrine must be at the sixth syllable.

The verse of fourteen syllables is now broken into a soft lyrick measure of verses, consisting alternately of eight syllables and six.

" She to receive thy radiant name, Selects a whiter space." — Fenton.

" When all shall praise, and ev'ry lay
Devote a wreath to thee,
That day, for come it will, that day
Shall I lament to see." — Lewis to Pope.

" Beneath this tomb an infant lies
To earth whose body lent,
Hereafter shall more glorious rise,
But not more innocent.
When the Archangel's trump shall blow,
And souls to bodies join,
What crowds shall wish their lives below
Had been as short as thine." — Wesley.

We have another measure very quick and lively, and therefore much used in (k) songs, which may be called the Anapestick, in which the accent rests upon every third syllable.

" May I góvern my pássions with ábsolute swáy,
And grow wíser and bétter as life wears awáy." — Dr. Pope.

In this measure a syllable is often retrenched from the first foot, as

" Diógenes súrly and proúd." — Dr. Pope.

" When présent, we lóve, and when ábsent agrée,
I thínk not of I'ris, nor I'ris of me." — Dryden.

These measures are varied by many combinations, and sometimes by double endings, either with or without rhyme, as in the heroick measure.

" 'Tis the divinity that stirs within us,
'Tis Heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man." — Addison.

So in that of eight syllables,

" They neither added nor confounded,
They neither wanted nor abounded." — Prior.

In that of (l) seven,

" For resistance I could fear none,
But with twenty ships had done.
What thou, brave and happy Vernon,
Hast atchiev'd with six alone." — Glover.

In that of six,

" Twas when the seas were roaring,
With hollow blasts of wind,
A damsel lay deploring,
All on a rock reclin'd." — Gay.

In the Anapestick,

" When terrible tempests assail us,
And mountainous billows affright,
Nor power nor wealth can avail us,
But skilful industry steers right." — Ballad.

To these measures, and their laws, may be reduced every species of English verse.

Our versification admits of few licences, except a synalepha, or (m) elision of e in the before a vowel, as th'eternal; and more rarely of o in to, as t'accept; and a synæresis, by which two short vowels coalesce into one syllable, as question, special; or a word is contracted by the expulsion of a short vowel before a liquid, a av'rice, temp'rance.

Thus have I collected rules and examples, by which the English language may be learned, if the reader be already acquainted with grammatical terms, or taught by a master to those that are more ignorant. To have written a grammar for such as are not yet initiated in the schools, would have been tedious, and perhaps at last ineffectual.

(k) [Formerly this lively measure was not thought unworthy to be employed on sacred subjects. Archbishop Parker finished a poetical translation of the Psalms in 1557, and has applied it to the thirty-sixth.

" The wordes of his mouth be unrightfully wayed,
In sleyghty deceit be they craftely layed:
Quyte ceased he hath to behaue hym aryght,
Good deed for to do hath he driven from hys syght."]

(l) [This measure of seven, though not common, is a century older than the time of Glover, whom Dr. Johnson cites. There is a pleasing song of five stanzas in the poems of Thomas Jordan, who wrote in the middle of the seventeenth century, from which I will copy one. The book is not dated; but the reference to the song is sign. § §. 8.

" Private jarres shall be relinquish'd,
Every man shall have his owne;
Thine and mine shall be distinguish'd,
And no seeds of sorrow sowne;
Comfort come to all complayners,
That were frighted back with frowns;
Governours no more be gayners,
Which are now the kings of towns."]

(m) [These elisions are now little regarded. Indeed the excessive brevity of the syllables, that is, of the second a in avarice, the second e in temperance, as also of the second vowels in every, general, barbarous, and the like, easily takes from them the power of forming a constituent part in the measure of a verse. But these vowels are not suppressed: they are pronounced like dactyls, as it were, distinct, but short. In to and the also the vowels are audible enough, however the words are deformed by elision. As to the practice of several modern poets in filling up all preterites and participles, as raised for rais'd, and distressed for distress'd or distrest, it seems an unnecessary, or rather an embarrassing, refinement. Words of this kind, which in prose consist of two emphatical syllables, will be used in poetry as one; but being printed without the distinctive mark of a strong syllable suppressed, and occurring twice or thrice in the same line, are certainly, in regard to a common reader, like the spells of other magicians, " of power to cheat the eye with blear illusion, and give it false presentments."]

APPENDIX, No. I.

[Grammatical Observations on the Old-English Language, from Mr. Tyrwhitt's Essay on the Language and Versification of Chaucer.]

THE following observations chiefly refer to the state in which the English language appears to have been about the time of Chaucer, and they will naturally divide themselves into two parts. The first will consider the remains of the antient Saxon mass, however defaced or disguised by various accidents; the second will endeavour to point out the nature and effects of the accessions, which, in the course of near three centuries, it had received from Normandy.

I. For the sake of method it will be convenient to go through the several parts of speech in the order in which they are commonly ranged by Grammarians.

1. The Prepositive Article ꝥe, ꝥeo, þat, (which answered to the ὁ, ἡ, τo, of the Greeks, in all its varieties of gender, case, and number,) had been long laid aside, and instead of it an indeclinable the was prefixed to all sorts of nouns, in all cases, and in both numbers.

2. The Declensions of the Nouns Substantive were reduced from six to one; and instead of a variety of cases in both numbers, they had only a Genitive case singular, which was uniformly deduced from the Nominative by adding to it es; or only s, if it ended in an e feminine; and that same form was used to express the (a) Plural number in all its cases: as, Nom. Shour, Gen. Shoures, Plur. Shoures. Nom. Name, Gen. Names, Plur. Names.

The Nouns Adjective had lost all distinction of Gender, Case, or Number.

3. The Primitive Pronouns retained one oblique case (b) in each number: as Ic, or I; We: Obl. Me; Us:—Thou; Ye: Obl. Thee; You.—He, She; Hi (c), or They: Obl. Him, Hire; Hem, or Them.

Their Possessives were in the same state with the Adjectives; Min, Thin, His, Hire; Oure, Youre, Hir, or Their. (d)

The Interrogative and Relative Who had a Genitive and Accusative case, Whos, and Whom, but no variety of number.

On the contrary, the Demonstrative, This, and That, had a plural expression, Thise, and Tho, but no variety of case.

The other words, which are often, though improperly, placed in the class of Pronouns, were all become undeclined, like the Adjectives; except, Eyther, alteruter; Neyther, neuter; Other, alter; which had a Genitive case Singular, Eytheres, Neytheres, Otheres: Other, alius, had a Genitive case singular, and a Plural number, Otheres; and Aller (a corruption of ealþa) was still in use, as the Genitive Plural of Alle. (e)

(a) It is scarce necessary to take notice of a few Plurals, which were expressed differently, though their number was greater in the time of Chaucer than it is now. Some of them seem to retain their termination in en from the second Declension of the Saxons; as, oxen, eyen, hosen, &c. Others seem to have adopted it euphoniæ gratiâ; as, brethren, eyren, instead of, bꝛoðꝛu, æꝥꝛu. And a few seem to have been always irregularly declined; as, men, wimmen, mice, lice, feet, &c. See Hickes, Gr. A. S. p. 11, 12.

(b) I take no notice here of the Genitive cases, min, thin, oure, youre, &c. as being at this time hardly ever distinguishable from Pronouns Possessive. How are we to know whether min boke should be rendered liber mei, or liber meus? In the Plural number however, in a few instances, the Genitive case seems to have retained its proper power. C. T. v. 825. oure aller cok—would be more naturally translated—nostrûm omnium gallus, than, noster omnium. And so in P. P. fol. cxi. Youre aller hele—vestrûm omnium salus; not, vestra.

(c) It is very difficult to say from whence, or why, the Pronouns, They, Them, and Their, were introduced into our language. The Saxon Pronouns, Hi, Hem, and Hir, seem to have been in constant use in the time of Robert of Gloucester. Sir John Mandeville and Chaucer use They, for Hi; but never, as I remember, (in the MSS. of authority) Them, or Their.

(d) The four last of these Possessive Pronouns were sometimes expressed a little differently, viz. Hires, Oures, Youres, and Hirs, or Theirs; as they are still, when the Noun to which they belong is understood, or when they are placed after it in a sentence. To the question, Whose book is this? we answer, Hers, Ours, Yours, or Theirs: or we declare; This book is Hers, Ours, &c. I can hardly conceive that the final s in these words is a mark of the Possessive (or Genitive) case, as a very able writer [Short Introduction to English Grammar, p. 35, 6.] seems to be inclined to think; because in the instances just mentioned, and in all which I have been able to find or to imagine, I cannot discover the least trace of the usual powers of the Genitive case. The learned Wallis, Gram. Ang. c. 7. has explained the use of these Pronouns without attempting to account for their form. He only adds; "Nonnulli, hern, ourn, yourn, hisn, dicunt, pro hers, ours, &c. sed barbarè, nec quisquam (credo) sic scribere solet." If it could be proved that these words were antiently terminated in n, we might be led to conjecture that they were originally abbreviations of her own, our own, &c. the n being afterwards softened into s, as it has been in many other words.

(e) It may be proper here to take a little notice of the Pronoun, or Pronominal Adjective, Self, which our best Grammarians, from Wallis downwards, have attempted to metamorphose into a Substantive. In the Saxon language, it is certain that Sylf was declined like other Adjectives, and was joined in construction with Pronouns Personal and Substantives, just as ipse is in Latin. They said, Ic sylf, Ego ipse; Min sylfes, mei ipsius; Me sylfne, me ipsum, &c. Petrus sylf, Petrus ipse, &c. See Hickes, Gr. A. S. p. 26. In the age of Chaucer, Self, like other Adjectives, was become undeclined. Though he writes, Self, Selve, and Selven, those varieties do not denote any distinction of case or number; for he uses indifferently, himself and himselven; hemself and hemselven. He joins it with Substantives, in the sense of ipse, as the Saxons did. Canterb. Tales, v. 2862. In that selve grove. In illo ipso nemore. v. 4535. Thy selve neighebour. Ipse tuus vicinus. But his great departure from the antient usage was with respect to the Pronouns Personal prefixed to Self. Instead of declining them through the cases which they still retained, he uses constantly, Myself, for, I self, and, Me self; Thyself, for, Thou self, and, Thee self; Him self and Hire self, for, He self and She self; and in the Plural number, Our self, for, We self, and Us self; Your self, for, Ye self, and You self; and Hem self, for, They self.

4. The Verbs, at the time of which we are treating, were very nearly reduced to the simple state in which they are at present.

They had four Modes, as now; the Indicative, the Imperative, the Subjunctive, and the Infinitive; and only two expressions of Time, the Present and the Past. All the other varieties of Mode and Time were expressed by Auxiliary Verbs.

In the inflexions of their Verbs, they differed very little from us, in the Singular number: I love, Thou lovest, He loveth: but in the Plural they were not agreed among themselves; some (f) adhering to the old Saxon form; We loveth, Ye loveth, They loveth; and others adopting, what seems to have been, the Teutonic; We loven, Ye loven, They loven. In the Plural of the Past Tense the latter form prevailed universally: I loved, thou lovedest, he loved; We loveden, Ye loveden, They loveden.

The second person Plural in the Imperative Mode regularly terminated in eth; as Loveth ye (g); though the final consonants, according to the genius of the language, were frequently omitted, especially in verse.

The Saxon termination of the Infinitive in an had been long changed into en; to loven, to liven, &c. and they were beginning to drop the n; to love, to live.

The Participle of the Present Time began to be generally terminated in ing; as, loving; though the old form, which terminated in ende, or ande, was still in use; as, lovende, or lovande. The Participle of the Past time continued to be formed, as the Past time itself was, in ed; as, loved; or in some contraction of ed (h); except among the irregular Verbs (i), where for the most part it terminated in en; as, bounden, founden.

The greatest part of the Auxiliary Verbs were only in use in the Present and Past Tenses of their Indicative and Subjunctive Modes. They were inflected in those tenses like other Verbs, and were prefixed to the Infinitive Mode of the Verb to which they were Auxiliary. I shall loven; I will, or woll, loven; I may, or mow, loven; I can, or con, loven, &c. We shullen loven; We willen, or wollen, loven; We mowen loven; We connen loven, &c. In the Past tense, I (k) shulde loven; I wolde loven; I mighte, or moughte loven; I coude loven, &c. We shulden, we wolden, we mighten, or moughten, we couden loven, &c.

The Auxiliary To Haven was a complete Verb, and, being prefixed to the Participle of the Past time, was used to express the Preterperfect and Preterpluperfect Tenses. I have loved, Thou havest, or hast loved, He haveth, or hath loved; We haven, or han

It would be vain to attempt to defend this practice of Chaucer upon any principles of reason or grammatical analogy. All that can be said for it is, that perhaps any regular practice was preferable to the confusion and uncertainty which seems to have prevailed before. Accordingly, the writers who succeeded him following his example, it became a rule, as I conceive, of the English language, that Personal Pronouns prefixed to Self were only used in one case in each number; viz. those of the First and Second Person in the Genitive case, according to the Saxon form, and those of the Third in the Accusative.

By degrees a custom was introduced of annexing Self to Pronouns in the Singular number only, and Selves (a corruption, I suppose, of Selven) to those in the Plural. This probably contributed to persuade our late Grammarians that Self was a Substantive; as the true English Adjective does not vary in the Plural number. Another cause of their mistake might be, that they considered, my, thy, our, your, to which self is usually joined, as Pronouns Possessive; whereas I think it more probable that they were the Saxon Genitive cases of the Personal Pronouns. The metaphysical Substantive Self, of which our more modern Philosophers and Poets have made so much use, was unknown, I believe, in the time of Chaucer.

(f) In the quotation from Trevisa [See the Hist. of the Eng. Lang. p. lxii.] it may be observed, that all his Plural Verbs of the Present Tense terminate in eth; whereas in Sir John Mandeville and Chaucer they terminate almost as constantly in en.

(g) Maud. p. 281. And at certeyn houres—thei seyn to certeyn officeres—Maketh pees (i. e. Make ye silence). And than sein the Officeres, Now pees! lysteneth (i. e. listen ye)—In the following page, Stondeth, is used for, Stand ye; and Putteth, for, Put ye.

(h) The methods, by which the final ed of the Past Tense and its Participle was contracted or abbreviated, in the age of Chaucer, were chiefly the following:

1. By throwing away the d.

This method took place in Verbs, whose last Consonant was t, preceded by a Consonant. Thus, caste, coste, hurte, putte, slitte, were used instead of, casted, costed, hurted, putted, slitted.

2. By transposing the d.

This was very generally done in Verbs, whose last Consonant was d, preceded by a Vowel. Thus, instead of, reded, leded, spreded, bleded, feded, it was usual to write, redde, ledde, spredde, bledde, fedde.—And this same method of transposition, I apprehend, was originally applied to shorten those words which we now contract by Syncope; as, lov'd, liv'd, smil'd, hear'd, fear'd, which were antiently written, lovde, livde, smilde, herde, ferde.

3. By transposing the d and changing it into t.

This method was used 1. in Verbs, whose last Consonant was t, preceded by a Vowel. Thus, leted, sweted, meted, were changed into, lette, swette, mette.—2. in Verbs, whose last Consonant was d preceded by a Consonant. Thus, bended, bilded, girded, were changed into, bente, bilte, girte.—And generally, in Verbs, in which d is changed into t, I conceive that d was first transposed; so that dwelled, passed, dremed, feled, keped, should be supposed to have been first changed into, dwellde, passde, dremde, felde, kepde, and then into, dwelte, paste, dremte, felte, kepte.

4. The last method, together with a change of the radical vowel, will account for the analogy of a species of Verbs, generally reputed anomalous, which form their Past Time and its Participle, according to modern orthography, in ght. The process seems to have been thus. Bring, bringed, brongde, brogde, brogte; Think, thinked, thonkde, thokde, thokte; Teche, teched, tachde, tachte, &c. Only fought, from fighted, seems to have been formed by throwing away the d (according to method 1.) and changing the radical Vowel. See instances of similar contractions in the Francic language. Hickes, Gramm. Fr. Th. p. 66.

(i) I consider those verbs only as irregular, in which the Past Time and its Participle differ from each other. Their varieties are too numerous to be particularly examined here; but I believe there are scarce any, in which the deviations from the regular form will not appear to have been made by some method of contraction, or abbreviation, similar to those which have been pointed out in the last note among the Regular Verbs. The common termination of the Participle in en is clearly a substitution for ed, probably for the sake of a more agreeable sound; and it is often shortened, as ed has been shewn to be, by transposition. Thus, drawen, knowen, boren, stolen, were changed into drawne, knowne, borne, stolne.

(k) Shulde and Wolde are contracted from Shulled, and Wolled, by transposing the d, according to method 2.

Mighte and Moughte are formed from maghed and moghed, according to method 3. Maghed, maghde, maghte; Moghed, moghde, moghte.

Coude is from conned, by transposition of the d, and softening the n into u. It is often written couthe, and always so, I believe, when it is used as a Participle. In the same manner Bishop Douglas, and other Scottish writers, use Begouth as the Preterit of Begin. Begonned, begonde, begoude, begouthe.

loved, &c. I hadde (l) loved, thou haddest loved, he hadde loved; We, ye, they, hadden loved.

The Auxiliary To ben was also a complete Verb, and, being prefixed to the Participle of the Past time, with the help of the other Auxiliary Verbs, supplied the place of the whole Passive voice, for which the Saxon language had no other form of expression. I am, thou art, he is loved; We, ye, they, aren, or ben loved. I was, thou wast, he was loved; We, ye, they, weren loved. (m)

5. With respect to the indeclinable parts of Speech, it will be sufficient to observe here, that many of them still remained pure Saxon: the greatest number had undergone a slight change of a letter or two; and the more considerable alterations, by which some had been disfigured, were fairly deducible from that propensity to abbreviation, for which the inhabitants of this island have been long remarkable, though perhaps not more justly so than their neighbours.

II. Such was, in general, the state of the Saxon part of the English language when Chaucer began to write: let us now take a short view of the accessions, which it may be supposed to have received at different times from Normandy.

As the language of our Ancestors was complete in all its parts, and had served them for the purposes of discourse and even of composition in various kinds, long before they had any intimate acquaintance with their French neighbours, they had no call from necessity, and consequently no sufficient inducement, to alter its original and radical constitutions, or even its customary forms. Accordingly, we have just seen, that, in all the essential parts of Speech, the characteristical features of the Saxon idiom were always preserved; and we shall see presently, that the crowds of French words, which from time to time were imported, were themselves made subject, either immediately or by degrees, to the laws of that same idiom.

The words, which were thus imported, were chiefly Nouns Substantive, Adjectives, Verbs, and Participles. The Adverbs, which are derived from French Adjectives, seem to have been formed from them after they were Anglicised, as they have all the Saxon termination lich or ly (n), instead of the French ment. As to the other indeclinable parts of Speech, our language, being sufficiently rich in its own stores, has borrowed nothing from France, except perhaps an Interjection or two.

(l) Hadde is contracted from Haved, as made is from maked. See Hickes, Gram. Fr. Th. p. 66.

(m) The Verb To do is considered by Wallis, and other later Grammarians, as an Auxiliary Verb. It is so used, though very rarely, by Chaucer. He more commonly uses it transitively: Do stripen me. Faites me depouiller.—Do me drenche. Faites me noyer. But still more frequently to save the repetition of a verb.

His eyen twinkeled in his hed aright,
As DON the sterres in a frosty night.

Dr. Hickes has taken notice that do was used in this last manner by the Saxons: Gr. A. S. p. 77. and so was faire by the French, and indeed is still. It must be confessed, that the exact power, which do, as an auxiliary, now has in our language, is not easy to be defined, and still less to be accounted for from analogy.

(n) As rarely, continually, veraily, bravely, &c. which correspond to the French adverbs, rarement, continuellement, veraiment, bravement, &c.

The Nouns Substantive in the French language (as in all the other languages derived from the Latin) had lost their cases long before the time of which we are treating; but such of them as were naturalised here, seem all to have acquired a Genitive case, according to the corrupted Saxon form, which has been stated above. Their Plural number was also new modelled to the same form, if necessary; for in Nouns ending in e feminine, as the greater part of the French did, the two languages were already agreed. Nom. Flour, Gen. Floures, Plur. Floures. Nom. Dame, Gen. Dames, Plur. Dames.

On the contrary, the Adjectives, which at home had a distinction of Gender and Number, upon their naturalisation here, seem to have been generally stript of both, and reduced to the simple state of the English Adjective, without Case, Gender, or Number.

The French Verbs were obliged to lay aside all their differences of Conjugation. Accorder, souffrir, recevoir, descendre, were regularly changed into—accorden, suffren, receiven, descenden. They brought with them only two Tenses, the Present and the Past; nor did they retain any singularity of Inflexion, which could distinguish them from other Verbs of Saxon growth.

The Participle indeed of the Present time, in some Verbs, appears to have still preserved its original French form; as usant, suffisant, &c.

The Participle of the Past time adopted, almost universally, the regular Saxon termination in ed; as accorded, suffred, received, descended. It even frequently assumed the prepositive particle ȝe, (or y, as it was latterly written,) which, among the Saxons, was very generally, though not peculiarly, prefixed to that Participle.

A Grammatical and Metrical Analysis of the first eighteen lines of the Canterbury Tales of Chaucer.

I. ¹*Whánne* that Ápril wíth his ²*shoúres* ³*sóte*
II. The droúghte of Márch hath ¹*pérced* tó the ²*róte*,
III. And ¹*báthed* évery véine in ²*swíche* ³*licoúr*,
IV. Of whíche ¹*vertúe* engéndred ís the floúr;
V. Whan Zéphirús eke wíth his ¹*sóte* bréthe

I. 1. Whanne, Sax. hpænne, is so seldom used as a Dissyllable by Chaucer, that for some time I had great doubts about the true reading of this line. I now believe that it is right, as here printed, and that the same word is to be pronounced as a Dissyllable in ver. 703. "But with these relikes whanne that he fond." Thanne, a word of the same form, occurs more frequently as a Dissyllable.

2. Shoures, Dis. Plural number.— 3. Sote. See ver. v.

II. 1. Perced. Dis. Participle of the Past Time.— 2. Rote; root.

III. 1. Bathed, Dis. See II. 1.— 2. Swiche, such; from Swilke, Sax.— 3. Licoúr, Fr. has the accent upon the last syllable, after the French mode.

IV. 1. Vertúe, Fr. may be accented in the same manner. There is another way of preserving the harmony of this verse, by making whiche (from whilke, Sax.) a Dissyllable. Vertue may then be pronounced, as it is now, with the accent on the first; the second syllable being incorporated with the first of engendred.

V. 1. Sote, swote, swete; sweet, Dis.

VI. 'Enspired háth in évery hólt and héthe
VII. The téndre 'cróppes, and the ²*yónge* sónne,
VIII. Háth in the Rám his 'hálfe coúrs ²*yrónne*,
IX. And 'smále ²*foúles* ³*máken* mélodíe,
X. That 'slépen ²*álle* níght with ópen eýe,
XI. So príketh 'hém ²*natúre* in ³*hír* ⁴*coráges*;
XII. Than 'lóngen fólk to ²*gón* on pílgrimáges,
XIII. And 'pálmer'es fór to ²*séken* ³*stránge* stróndes,
XIV. To 'sérve ²*hálwes* ³*coúthe* in sóndry lóndes;
XV. And spécially' from évery 'shíres énde
XVI. Of 'Englelónd to Cánterbúry 'they ²*wénde*,
XVII. The hóly blísful mártyr fór to séke,
XVIII. That 'hém hath ²*hólpen*, whán that théy were ³*séke*.

VI. 1. Enspired, Tris. Part. of Past Time.

VII. 1. Croppes, Dis. Pl. N. as shoures. I. 2.— 2. Yonge, Dis. Stronge and Longe are pronounced in the same manner.

VIII. 1. Halfe, or Halve, Dis. The original word is Halfen. —2. Yronne; Run. Part. of the Past Time, with the Saxon prepositive particle ʒe, which in the MSS. of Chaucer is universally expressed by y, or i.

IX. 1. Smale, Dis.— 2. Foules, Dis. as Shoures. I. 2.— 3. Maken; make. Plural Number of the Present Tense.

X. 1. Slepen, as Maken. IX. 3.— 2. Alle, Dis.

XI. 1. Hem; Them. It is constantly used so by Chaucer. 2. Nature should perhaps be accented on the last syllable (or rather the last but one, supposing it a Trisyllable), after the French manner, though in the present case the verse will be sufficiently harmonious if it be accented on the first. That Chaucer did often accent it after the French manner appears from ver. 8778. 9842. 11657. 11945. 12229. In the same manner he accents Figúre, ver. 2037. 2045. Mesúre, ver. 8132. 8498. Asúre, Statúre, ver. 8130, 3. Peintúre, ver. 11967. Aventúre, ver. 1188. 1237. Creatúre, ver. 2397. 4884. and many other words of the same form, derived from the French language.— 3. Hir; Their. The Possessive Pronoun of the third Person Plural is variously written, Hir, Hire, Her, and Here; not only in different MSS. but even in the same page of good MSS. There seems to be no reason for perpetuating varieties of this kind, which can only have taken their rise from the unsettled state of our Orthography before the invention of Printing, and which now contribute more than any real alteration of the language to obscure the sense of our old Authors. In this edition, therefore, Hir is constantly put to signify Their; and Hire to signify Her, whether it be the Oblique case of the Personal Pronoun She, or the Possessive of the same Pronoun.— 4. Coráges, Fr. is to be accented on the Penultima. So Avantáge, ver. 2449. 4566. Brocáge, 3375. Foráge, ver. 3166. Lináge, ver. 4270. 5419. Serváge, ver. 1948. 4788. Costáge, ver. 5831. Parágc, ver. 5832.

XII. 1. Longen, as Maken. IX. 3.— 2. Gon, Infinitive Mode of Go, terminated in n according to the Saxon form.

XIII. 1. Pálmer'es, Dis. the e of the termination being cut out by Syncope, as it generally is in Plural Nouns of three Syllables, accented upon the first, and in the Past Tenses and their Participles of Verbs, of the same description ending in ed. The reason seems to be, that, where the Accent is placed so early, we cannot pronounce the final syllables fully, without laying more stress upon them, than they can properly bear.— 2. Seken, as Gon. XII. 2.— 3. Strange, Dis. Fr.

XIV. 1. Serve, Dis. from Serven, the n being thrown away before h.— 2. Halwes, Sax. halʒeƴ. The Saxon ʒ is changed into w, as in sorwe, morwe, and some others; though it generally passes into y. The derivatives from this same word afford us instances of both forms; Holyness, Holyday, All-Hallows-day.— 3. Couthe; known. The Participle of the Past Time from Connen, to know.

XV. 1. Shires, Dis. Genitive Case Sing.

XVI. 1. Englelond, Trisyllable, from the Saxon Englalanda.— 2. The last foot consists of three syllables.

—to Cán | terbúr | y they wénde.

XVIII. 1. Hem; Them. See XI. 1.— 2. Holpen, the Participle of the Past Time from the Irregular Verb Help.— 3. Seke; Sick. As Chaucer usually writes this word Sike, we may suppose that in this instance he has altered the Orthography in order to make the Rime more exact; a liberty, with which he sometimes indulges himself, though much more sparingly than his contemporary Poets. The Saxon writers afford authorities to justify either method of spelling, as they use both Seoca and Sioca.

I have hitherto considered these verses as consisting of ten syllables only; but it is impossible not to observe, that, according to the rules of pronunciation established above, all of them, except the 3d and 4th, consist really of eleven syllables. This is evident at first sight in ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, and might be shewn as clearly by authority or analogy, in the others; but as the eleventh syllable, in our versification, being unaccented, may always, I apprehend, be absent or present without prejudice to the metre, there does not seem to be any necessity for pointing it out in every particular instance.

An octavo of near 900 pages, in many of which are very acute and forcible passages and descriptions. It is dedicated to bishop Hall, to whom, as to other authors, he professes his obligations; commencing his address with this just and pithy remark. "Right reverend father, and no lesse honoured lord, I see many make use of your lines, few acknowledge, none return to give thanks! But no cheating like the fellony of wit; for hee which theeves that, robs the owner, and coosens all that heare him."	Ch. I.
